

Dear Mom + Dad! July 9. Sunday.

We finally got moved up here and things are pretty well squared away now. We are about 200 miles north of Cau Heng on the beach of the south China sea. The place is called Tuy Hoa. There are nothing but mountains covered with jungle up here, nothing like the flat land down where we were before. We are only half a mile from the beach itself. The wind blows all the time and there is sand everywhere. Our barracks are OK though, we have permeate type buildings with cement floors and guys who come in and clean up the place and wash our clothes, costs us 1.10 a week. Pretty good price huh? We were only supposed to be up here from 30 to 90 days but there is a chance we might stay. There is a big airforce base here and the whole place is pretty big. They say its never been mortared for almost two years.

I got your letter today with Greg's pictures in it. He sure does look good. If he does come over here I'd might get to see him if he isn't up around Da Nang. I don't know of any maines at all Don't around Saigon anywhere.. all the maines are up around the DMZ and Da nang. Things are pretty bad up there. We are working with the Korean troops up here and from what I hear the VC are scared to death of them. They're real fighters, they are supposed to be the maines of Korea.

Be back tomorrow its 11:30 and we are flying in the morning so I better get to bed.

Back again, two days later.
We've been flying every day up here and all we've been doing is flying supplies up into the mountains to the Koreans. Some places we can't even land because of the jungle. So we hover about 30 to forty feet and have to just throw their supplies out on the ground.
They are really good soldiers to work with they don't mess around when it comes to working.

Got some paper and a bunch of envelopes from Dannie today, now I'll have quite a bit of paper.

We flew out over the ocean today and shot sharks from the helicopter.
Some of them are 6 to 8 feet long, you can see them all along the shore because the water is so clear. Guess Greg will be leaving again pretty soon. Well there much more to say so I'll end now so take care and write soon

Love Rev.
