Here is your copy of the Garry Trudeau poster and thanks for supporting THE VIETNAM PROJECT!

Many of you have asked when and where you can see the series. It is now in production and will be ready for broadcast early in 1983, although it may be held back until the fall. It will air on public television stations around the country, so watch local TV listings, or phone your local PBS stations for scheduling information.

This unique series has been in the works for some time now. Like all good things, it's taken a while to do. In the meantime, we'd like to tell you a little more about it, since we're very proud of it.

THE VIETNAM PROJECT is a television history of America and France in Indochina. The series will cover the years of conflict involving the French and Americans with the Vietnamese and their Indochinese neighbors from 1945 to 1975, with greatest emphasis on the period of heavy American participation 1965-1973, against the background of the earlier French-Indochina war and the French colonial period.

Begun a year and a half ago at WGBH in Boston, the Project draws on more than 150 recent interviews with American, Vietnamese and French participants--both policy makers and ordinary individuals who were caught up in those historic events.

Hundreds of thousands of feet of film from 60 archives around the world are being used to provide the most authentic retelling of the story of "the living room war."

THE VIETNAM PROJECT is being produced by teams from three countries--a combined U.S./British unit working out of WGBH in Boston and a French team based in Paris.

We think it's going to be the most thorough, most serious analysis that television could bring to bear on a period that has affected us all so deeply.

Thank you for helping to make it possible.
