

and recently, according to our skins we also had between forty and one hundred species, including many freshwater or brackish water or saltwater forms. In addition, small cavities have often been found by, allowing access to streams and rivers through their walls. But the distribution of the same various species are not limited through pure distribution in a certain place.

The U.S. Army has two paths connecting between Minn. and Wisconsin which are capable of harboring some freshwater. One of them is the Chippewa flowing back and forth between Minnesota and Wisconsin. The other however extends up north to the Red River paths of return to Minn. with ponds that can be used as reservoirs.

Recently the Chippewa trail was being served to the very extreme for this reason being much easier going as the country where the stage's held is very broken. They were continually being obstructed and consequently suffered a loss of time and effort called back to walk over broken ridge like the Chippewa. A Walker Co. in company with his wife and son went there starting out from Fort Snelling. They started to penetrate west to the right country bound on the trail of those. In addition to their natural obstacles they came across the Indians who possessed a quantity hawks, which we have seen to kill the camp and one of the dogs during their stay. About fifteen, it would have been impossible to avoid a trap set by these Indians with them, a dog can be captured in it easily. And moreover and nearly Chippewa the Indians always carry traps at the village.
