8. Logistics.

a. General. November was an active month for resupply over the road by truck convoys from FLSG-B Dong Ha and Quang Tri. All classes of supplies which included Class I, II, III, IV and V were trucked from Dong Ha out to the three OPCON battalions located in the Northern I Corps Areas.

b. Supply

(1) The overall supply support during the month has been adequate. Attaining medium size jungle utilities is a continuous problem. During this period a concerted effort was placed on embarkation. Boxes have been marked and cargo manifests updated.

(2) The Class II situation continues to improve; however, replenishment of certain items of supply used on a day to day bases is sporadic, i.e., memoograph paper, bond paper, manifold carbon sets, etc. When these items are available at FLSG-B no significant problem exists. In the event the requisition is passed on to FLC, the long lead time in receiving the material is not compatible with the lead time used to complete inventory control date.

12. Intelligence

a. Significant Events. Enemy activity remained minor and isolated in 3d Marines AO throughout the month of November. Activity was primarily of a guerrilla nature. However, it is believed that NVA units and elements were involved.

(1) Mining and booby-trap incidents more than doubled the total for any previous month in the same area. The majority of them were placed on or beside roads. Route 561 between C-2 and C-3 was most frequently mined, but many mines were also encountered on Route 9 between Cam Lo and Khe Gio Bridge and Route 558 between Cam Lo and Mai Loc. Although there were a few home-made mines discovered, most were Soviet AT mines. All of them were metallic.

SECRET

(2) Sniping and small ambushes by the enemy also increased. The location of most mining incidents, Route 561 between C-2 and C-3, was also the location of most of the ambushes and much of the sniping. In these brief contacts, RPG's, automatic weapons, small arms, and sometimes mortars were used by the enemy. After one such incident, a sophisticated Soviet long-barrelled sniper rifle was taken from a dead NVA. The enemy unit identified from documents taken from bodies was the 3d Battalion of the 27th Independent Regiment, NVA.

(3) The most significant contact occurring during November happened near LZ Sierra (XD 9462). There, on 14 Nov, an estimated NVA platoon ambushed a platoon of A/1/3. Five NVA were killed in the action. The enemy unit was not identified, but based on activity in that area in the recent past, it was possibly an element of the 27th Independent Regiment, NVA.

(4) Since the DMZ fire limitations went into effect, there have been no incidents of enemy artillery firing into the 3d Marines AO. Mortar fire, however, increased significantly and on 10 November C-2 and elements of 3/3 in the field were rocketed from both within and just south of the DMZ. Enemy mortars (60mm, 82mm, and possibly 120mm) were active on 17 days of the month.

(5) Enemy use of the DMZ apparently continued. In addition to the rocket fire on the 10th, there were numerous incidents of aircraft receiving small arms and automatic weapons fire and numerous sightings on both sides of the Ben Hai River within the zone. A friendly reconnaissance patrol had one minor contact during which one enemy soldier was killed and his body extracted with the team. Documents he carried included a south Vietnamese civilian identification card and a letter from parents in North Vietnam. The names on the two documents did not correspond, indicating that the enemy may be sending regular NVA troops south to pose as civilian Viet Cong.
