NARRATIVE SUMMARY

March, 1969 saw the dramatic conclusion of Operation DEWEY CANYON, doubtless one of the most significant operations of the Vietnam conflict to date.

Huge supply caches found in late February in the upper regions of the A Shau Valley were still being exploited through the early days of March. Concurrently, a phaseout of forces from the DEWEY CANYON AO was undertaken as the enemy attempted to regroup. Elements of the Regiment working supply caches completed their tasks of evacuation and destruction of material even as pressures from enemy attacks reached a critical level. LZ's in the cache area became all but untenable. Fire Support Bases Erskine, Cunningham and Turnage received an increasingly heavy volume of enemy indirect fire as the operation drew to a close.

On 15 and 16 March the Regimental CP and 3/9(-), together with two Batteries from 2/12, were extracted from FSB Cunningham under heavy fire from enemy mortars and 122mm artillery. W/2/12 was displaced to TAM BOI to cover 1/9's later extraction from that position. On 18 March 1/9 and W/2/12 were extracted from TAM BOI. To support this effort, maximum fixed wing and helicopter assets were made available. E/2/12, positioned at FSB Turnage (Tiger Mountain), was provided security by I/3/9 and delivered accurate counter mortar fires to cover the TAM BOI extraction. These units were to be the last elements lifted from the DEWEY CANYON AO. Close air support was instrumental in silencing enemy mortar and antiaircraft positions during this most crucial phase of the operation.

Intelligence played a vital role in the final stages of DEWEY CANYON. A special intelligence detachment from III MAF contributed immeasurably to the successful extraction from the DEWEY CANYON AO. For more detailed information on the activities of this detachment see Special Intelligence Report, submitted separately.

DEWEY CANYON was followed by rehabilitation periods at the Cua Viet R&R facility for each battalion. Concurrently, the Regiment assumed responsibility for an AO that was to ultimately include all of Route #9 from immediately west of Dong Ha to the Khe Sanh Plateau. Also included were A-4, C-2, Cam Lo, Khe Gio Bridge, FSB Fuller, Elliott and Vandegrift Combat Bases, FSB Cates, and Hill 950.

INTELLIGENCE SUMMARY, MARCH 1969

1. General. The final stage of Operation DEWEY CANYON found the intelligence section relying heavily on the special intelligence detachment attached from II MAF. The employment of this unit was instrumental in the successful extraction of FSB CUNNINGHAM, FSB TURNAGE and the 1st Battalion from the TAM BOI area for specific details on the special intelligence detachment. See Special Intelligence report submitted separately. After the termination of DEWEY CANYON, emphasis was placed on updating intelligence on the Regiments new AO. A sub-team from the 17 ITT detachment was displaced to assist the 1st Bn operating the vicinity of the Cam Lo resettlement hamlet. As the month of March terminated limited enemy contact along route #9 indicated the presence of elements of the enemy's 1st and 3rd battalions of the 27th Regiment and the 31st LF group.

A. AIR SUPPORT SUMMARY, March 1969

1. Fixed Wing Support

a. Support was excellent as the "DEWEY CANYON" operation drew to a close. The highlight of this month's support was the excellent coverage by attack aircraft, during the final extraction of friendly forces, in the northern A Shau Valley. Other support consisted of adequate TPQ coverage, excellent AO support, TACA, TA4, and radio relay support. Attack aircraft also engaged targets of opportunity, most notably along Route 922.

b. 122 close air support missions flown.

c. 121 TPQ missions were flown; expending 325 tons of ordnance. There were 27 day and 94 night missions.

d. Tactical Air Observation support totaled 218 missions/301.5 hours. Missions included artillery adjustment, tactical air control and visual reconnaissance.

e. 56 TA4 missions for border servillance.

f. 25 C-117 radio relay missions.

2. CAS Bomb Damage Assessment.

a. KBA - 22

b. Bunkers destroyed - 61; Damaged - 15

c. Positions destroyed - 12; Damaged - 5

d. Secondary explosions - 39

e. Meters of trenchline destroyed - 75

f. Miscellaneous damaged and destroyed; 1 - 50 cal destroyed, 2 - 50 cal damaged, 1 - mortar destroyed, 6 - trucks destroyed, 3 - machine guns destroyed, 1 - 122mm gun destroyed.

3. Helicopter Support

a. The most notably achievement involving helicopter support was the successful extraction of an Infantry Battalion (Rein), plus, 2 Artillery Batteries located in the Northern A Shau Valley. Air crews, both Marine and Army, displayed great courage by flying through intense small arms and mortars to successfully extract these troops. Other support included medevac missions, tactical troop lifts and C&C support. Overall support was excellent.

b. A total of 2976 personnel were helilifted. Included were 22 company or larger tactical lifts and the displacement of 7 artillery batteries.

c. 503,153 pounds of cargo transported.

d. Medevac helicopters flew 129 missions; evacuating 344 personnel.

e. Other missions flown included C&C and gun escort.

f. 269 helicopters were utilized by Regiment and its supporting elements during this period.

4. Personnel and Equipment

a. All battalions have 1 ALO and FAC assigned.

b. Major F. L. GATZ, the current Regimental ALO is scheduled for relief by Major W. B. CRANE on the 28th.

c. No alert beacon test flights flown during this period.

COMMUNICATIONS SUMMARY, MARCH 1969

1. General. During the period 1-18 March the Communication Platoon continued to provide communication support for Operation DEWEY CANYON from FSB Cunningham. Normal communication operations were continued at VCB and Quang Tri. On 16 March elements of the 9th Marine's Communication Platoon displaced from FSB Cunningham to VCB. This displacement of platoon members and equipment was completed by 18 March. On 20 March the relay team positioned on Tiger Mountain returned as well as the three man relay team which had been on Hill 819.

From 18-31 March the Communication Platoon was involved in an intensive program of equipment repair and maintenance. During this period a program of communication instruction was begun to improve the proficiency of the platoon personnel in their MOS's and to cross-train them in various Communication MOS's. Also two group study courses were ordered from NCI which will involve 39 members of the platoon. These courses are Basic Wire Communications and Radiotelephone, Telegraph, and Visual Communication Procedures.

2. Radio. The 9th Marines Radio Section supported Operation DEWEY CANYON and operations from VCB during March. The radio circuits maintained were Regt TacI, Div Tas IIA, Regt Log, and Bn Log.

From 1-15 March the 9th Marines CP at FSB Cunningham was provided with reliable voice and secure voice communications between the organic units and TPH/Division. Relays placed at Hill 819 and Signal Hill greatly enhanced the reliability of these nets. On 15 March the CP displaced to VCB and assumed net control upon reaching VCB. On 18 March the remainder of men and equipment returned to VCB with the exception of the relay teams at Tiger Mountain and Hill 819 which returned on the 20th. The relay team at Tiger Mountain was established from 16-18 March to insure secure voice communication from VCB to organic elements in the field.

From 16-31 March reliable secure voice communication was provided for the CP at VCB. This involved the use of a RT-524/KY8 on Signal Hill remoted to the COC with a PRC-77/KY38 used as a back-up means of communication. On the 29th and 30th some problems were experienced with the RT-524/KY8 due to overheating. This was solved by rotating RT-524/KY8's.

An extensive program of PM and 2nd echelon maintenance was undertaken to bring all equipment to peak operational efficiency. Classes were conducted on radio operation in accordance with a training schedule designed to improve operator proficiency and knowledge of equipment.

3. Radio Relay. Between 1 March and 22 March the Radio Relay section carried out prescribed preventive maintenance on all equipment. During this period Radio Relay was dormant without added responsibilities.

4. Message Center. During the month of March Message Center personnel maintained a courier service from 9th Marines Rear at Quang Tri to the Forward position at VCB. Traffic received at VCB Message Center from both the Rear and Task Force Hotel was promptly processed and delivered to S-1 for further distribution. A secure teletype circuit between 9th Marines and 3d Marine Division COC was still being maintained although the circuit was down for ten days due to generator failure at VCB.

Total messages sent on the circuit were two while the number received on the teletype circuit was nine. Total number of messages sent by the 9th Marines for March was 156 and the total number of messages received was 2346.

5. Wire. During the month the Wire Section maintained wire communication at FSB Cunningham, VCB, and Quang Tri. Wire Communication was provided for FSB Cunningham from 1-16 March with all locals loud and clear. From 16-17 March members of the Wire Section returned to VCB from FSB Cunningham. Before departing Fsb Cunningham the Wire Section removed all wire lines which had been installed on FSB Cunningham.

On 21 March the SB-86/PT was replaced by 3 SB-22/PT's at VCB. The SB-86/PT was in need of repair and was sent to Quang Tri. During the period of time involved in changing switchboards the loss of communication was held to only 30 minutes. Communication has been loud and clear with the SB-22/PT's.

During March the following new lines were installed at VCB:

Staff NCO & Co. Grade Officers Quarters
Field Grade Quarters
EM Club
Staff Club
S-3 Operations Chief
1/4 Remote Line (extra)
S-3 Hot Line to Division COC via TRC-97
FSCC Hot Line to Division FSCC via TRC-97

During March approximately 5 miles of wire were used to install new lines and maintain old lines. Preventive Maintenance was carried out weekly with faulty gear being replaced as soon as possible.

5. Supporting Forces

a. Artillery and Fire Support Coordination

(1) Supporting Forces. Artillery support for Operation Dewey Canyon was provided by the 2nd Battalion 12th Marines (Reinforced), which was in Direct Support of the 9th Marines. Due to range considerations, no General Support fires were furnished by the 12th Marines beyond the initial phase of the operation. Reinforcing fires were provided throughout the operation in the eastern portion of the AO by C/1/83 (175mm SP) positioned at Fire Support Base Jack (4927 GS).

(2) Fire Support Coordination

(a) Fire Support Coordination Centers were maintained at each infantry battalion and clearance of fires was accomplished at the 9th Marines FSCC. When possible, the "At My Command" method of control was used to enable simultaneous air and artillery support.

(b) Sav-A-Plane information was not passed to Task Force Hotel due to the remote location of the AO and intermittent communications with that headquarters. Aircraft working the Dewey Canyon AO obtained SAP information from the 9th Marines TACP.

(c) Clearance of fires along common boundaries might have created lengthy delays had the problem not been anticipated. Lateral clearance with the 101st Airborne Div was requested and approved. A liaison team from C/1/83 served as the point of contact. Lateral clearance was also arranged with the 2nd ARVN Regt. A liaison officer from 2/12 was furnished to the ARVN for this purpose. Clearance with Recon and Special Forces was expedited by the presence of representatives in the 9th Marines COC. Air clearance in Laos was initially to be from ABCCC, however, satisfactory communications were never establish so a Permanent Sav-A-Plane was established out to maximum artillery range into Laos. In summary, the 9th Marines never had to obtain clearance from a higher headquarters. In view of delays inherent in vertical clearance this undoubtedly expedited the delivery of fire support.

(d) Specified Strike Zones were established well clear of friendlies to allow deep air support freedom to attack targets of opportunity.

(d) Centralized tactical and technical fire direction was employed throughout the operation except on two brief occasions. When the Battalion FDC was disabled by enemy ground attack, technical control was temporarily decentralized, in accordance with Battalion SOP, for a period of one hour. During the extraction phase, E-2-12, with selective personnel augmentation, assumed control for E-2-12 and W-2-12 when the Battalion FDC march ordered for VCB.

(e) The most valuable means of target acquisition was the aerial observer. AOs also helped suppress hostile artillery and mortars. The Counter-Mortar Radar positioned at FSB Cunningham was of little value.

b. Air Support

(1) Fixed Wing Support

(a) Inclement weather was a significant factor and affected air support over 50% of the time. Marine pilot proficiency, under instrument conditions, overcame this obstacle to deliver minimum required support in order to permit continuation of the attack.

(b) Because of poor ground UHF capability, 99% of all CAS strikes were controlled by the TAC(A). This combination proved effective against the well dug-in enemy who was supported by numerous AA guns. Not one attack aircraft was lost to ground fire. This same combination located and destroyed 122mm guns which were positioned out of range of friendly counter battery fires.

(c) Other fixed wing support included TA4, C-117 "Spooky", C-117/C-130 flareship, C-130 paradrop, C-117 radio relay, C-117 "Sniffer" and psywar missions.

(d) A total of 461 CAS missions were conducted. These flights accounted for the following BDA:

175	KBA
32	Trucks destroyed; 3 damaged
2	APC destroyed
7	122mm destroyed; 5 damaged
2	50 cal destroyed; 1 damaged
3	7.62 MG destroyed
1	82mm mortar destroyed
1	Unk size supply cache destroyed
229	Bunkers destroyed; 35 damaged
25	Structures destroyed
390	Meters trenchline destroyed
51	AA positions destroyed; 7 damaged
190	Secondary explosions
2	Artillery revetments destroyed
36	POL drums destroyed
12	Road cuts; 2 partial
1	Bulldozer damaged

(e) TPQ missions contributed significantly to the operation, harrassing the NVA during his attempts to maneuver and resupply. They were of particular value in suppressing enemy artillery when inclement weather precluded AO or CAS support. TPQ missions were also used on an emergency basis during enemy ground attacks. Average response time was 37 minutes for an emergency request. Day missions totalled 186 drops and there were 347 night drops. Over 2,095 tons of ordnance were expended.

(f) Tactical air observers contributed 618 missions with 834 hours flown. The aerial observers provided invaluable support by locating enemy targets and controlling artillery fires.

(g) TA4 missions totalled 115.

(h) C-117 "Spooky" aircraft flew 4 missions. On each occasion, they were used by troops in contact.

(i) C-117/C-130 flareships flew 14 missions in support of troops in contact or night medevac missions.

(j) C-117 radio relay aircraft flew 48 missions. Because of limited communications between forward and rear ground elements, this service was invaluable.

(k) C-117 "Sniffer" flew 6 missions.

(l) 5 Psywar flights were flown.

(m) C-130s accomplished 4 multidrop R/S missions.

(2) Helicopter Support

(a) Helicopters were the major means of resupply and only means of medevac during Dewey Canyon. Long transit times (25 NM from nearest support activity), inclement weather, high LZ altitudes, rugged mountain terrain and heavy enemy resistance created an unprecedented challenge. To provide responsive helicopter support, a TAFDS Detachment of MABS-36, was positioned at FSB Lightning. Both Marine and Army pilots flew in support of Dewey Canyon. Most noteworthy was the successful extraction of the last elements on 18 March. Although friendly units were surrounded by enemy troops anti-aircraft weapons and mortars, Marine and Army pilots braved heavy fire and mortars to successfully extract every man. Not one helicopter was lost during this most crucial phase.

(b) Significant Support Data:

1 48 Company size or larger troop lifts were conducted, transporting 9,121 troops.

2 22 artillery battery displacements were accomplished.

3 1,533,597 pounds of cargo were transported not including artillery rounds.

(c) Company A, 3rd SP Battalion. Co A, provided Helicopter Support Teams (HSTs) down to the company and battery level. Terminal guidance was provided for incoming helicopters, external and internal loads were received and sent out, and assistance was provided for the construction of LZs. Shore Party personnel also provided logistical assistance at the Vandegrift Combat Base, Camp Evans, and Quang Tri Logistic Support Areas.

(d) Company C, 3rd Engineer Battalion. Company C provided close combat support throughout the operation with a platoon assigned in direct support of each infantry battalion. A primary task of the engineers was the construction of five fire support bases. (Cunningham, Lightning, Erskine, Razor, and Turnage.) A secondary task was the destruction of huge arms and ammunition caches uncovered during the operation, including the destruction of captured 122mm guns, 85mm guns, and numerous smaller AA weapons.

(e) Det, Company C, 11th Engr Battalion. This detachment provided heavy equipment support for engineer construction tasks at fire support bases.

(f) Det, Support Co, 3rd Engr Bn. This detachment provided heavy equipment and maintenance support required in the construction of fire support bases.

(g) Det, Ordnance Maintenance Co, FLSG-B. This detachment disassembled two captured 122mm artillery pieces to facilitate extraction from the AO.

(h) Det, Company B, 3rd SP Bn. This detachment provided officer and Staff NCO rigging teams in support of several artillery and engineer equipment displacements throughout the operation.

(i) Det, EOD Plat, FLSG-B. This detachment rendered effective support in the destruction of huge quantities of ordnance and equipment captured during the operation.

(j) Det's, NMCB 7 and 128. These detachments provided heavy equipment support in the construction of fire support bases.

6. Intelligence

a. General. Operation Dewey Canyon was conducted in an area where no other major Free World Force had previously operated. This resulted in little intelligence available at the commencement of the operation. Indications were that the objective area was a major supply and infiltration area since Base Area 610 was to the west, Base Area 611 to the south, the A Shau valley to the southeast, Base Area 101 to the northeast and Base Area 114 to the east. Thedistance to be traveled from friendly bases, and the unpredictable weather conditions, necessitated the formation of a compact intelligence unit at the regimental level to insure rapid dissemination of intelligence to maneuvering elements. The attachment of a provisional reconnaissance company (-), with command group, a detachment from 4th Plat, Opns Co, 1st Radio Battalion and a sub-team from 15th ITT proved to be an effective combination. The intelligence collection effort was geared to support the unique requirements of each phase of the operation. Specifically:

(1) Phase I. Pre-D-Day collection of intelligence through locally available means in preparation for post-D-day activities.

(2) Phase II. During this period two battalions engaged in saturation patrolling meeting light enemy resistance. Reconnaisance teams were employed to screen the Regiment's flanks and to reconnoitor suspected enemy infiltration routes. The operating units found several caches and captured the enemy 88th Field Hospital. During this period, intelligence accumulated indicated the enemy's intention was to impede the Regiment's thrust south of FSBs Cunningham and Erskine.

(3) Phase III. The period 12 February to 18 March proved to be the most successful phase of the operation. As predicted, the enemy had consolidated and did attempt to block the southerly advance. Enemy morale and organization deteriorated rapidly, reaching a low point on 27 and 28 February 1969. Significant actions contributing to the enemy's dilemma were the capture of two 122mm field guns on 20 February, an Arclight on TAM BOI on 20 February and an ambush on Route 922 on 22 February. During this period, the enemy did attempt limited offensive action. On 11 February he attempted to overrun FSB Erskine and on the morning of 17 February launched an unsuccessful sapper attack on FSB Cunningham. This phase of the operation accounted for twelve 122mm field guns, four 85mm arty pieces and numerous caches of ammunition, foodstuffs and motor transport equipment. The enemy at this time appeared to be reorganizing as evidenced by the increasing number of swift small attacks and ambushes. Intelligence disclosed his intent to inflict maximum damage to friendly units during the extraction.

b. Enemy Units - Operation Dewey Canyon was conducted in the vicinity of one of the enemy's main infiltration routes. For this reason, documents captured could not be considered conclusive proof of enemy unit dispositions. A conservative estimate of enemy forces engaged includes 1 artillery regiment, 1 infantry regiment reinforced, and a regiment consisting of rear service and transportation units. A listing of unit designations encountered is as follows:

(1) Units identified from POWs:

(a) 16th Bn, 17th Bn, 18th Bn, 6th Regt
(b) 2nd Squad, 2nd Plt, 4th Co, 130th Bn 4th Indep Engr Regt, 559th Group

c. Installations. The Regiment encountered a variety of enemy installations in the operating area. Generally the enemy had cleared and cultivated small plots of land throughout the AO In the vicinity of the cultivated areas it was normal to find classrooms, barracks and bunkers. The capture of the 88th Field Hospital (YD 127154) included approximately 5 acres of vegetable planted so that continuous harvesting was possible. The complex itself consisted of 5 large bamboo huts hidden under jungle cano with squad-size A-frame bunkers near each hut. As the regiment progressed south toward Rt 922, installations became heavily fortified bunkers. Those complexes were utilized to store caches as well as to billet personnel. Near route 922, where numerous air strikes had previously been run, the enemy utilized bomb craters to store caches. He would place equipment in the bottom of the crater, cover it with a bamboo mat and shovel in loose dirt thus recreating the crater bottom. The most elaborate and significar installation was found at TAM BOI (YD 255044). The enemy had constructed a large tunnel/cave complex which had effectively wi stood an Arclight.

d. Enemy Artillery. Of the ten enemy artillery pieces captured by the Regiment, six were captured in firing position. The intact two 122mm field guns captured by the 1st Bn at YD19 197053) evidently were in the process of being moved south to route 922. The two 122mm guns captured by 2nd Bn (YD 159025 and YD 148022) were just off route 922. It appeared the enemy was attempting to move these guns west. One gun had been overturned by a close air strike; the other was sitting off the road with its barrel pointin NE. (Engineers completed destruction of these guns by placing a diamond charge of C-4 on the barrel, midway of the length, and a small charge in the breech. Several artillery rounds were then placed under the gun and rigged to blow simultaneous with the other two charges.) The two 122mm guns captured by the 3rd Bn in the TAM BOI area were in firin position facing SE. These guns were deployed to fire in the direction of the A Shau Valley. The terrain precluded repositioning of the guns to fire on 9th Marine elements to the NNW. The four 85mm pieces captured by the 2nd Bn (YD 1603) were emplaced to fire East toward the 1st Bn and at the TAM BOI area. These guns were emplaced in two sections with guns being approximately 50 meters apart and sections being approx 300 meters apart. The enemy had spiked or damaged all but the two guns captured by the 1st Bn indicating his inability to control route 922 and the disruption of organization in his artillery unit.

e. Reconnaisance. The reconnaisance effort of Operation Dewey Canyon was conducted by a reconnaissance company (-) under control of a command group assigned to the 9th Marines from the 3rd Reconnaisance Battalion. This was a provisional company. There were usually nine teams in direct support of the Regiment. The Reconnaisance teams were utilized from 25 January to 5 March. During this period 45 teams were inserted.

7. Mission. On order, the 9th Marines (Rein) commences offensive operations in the southern DA KRONG VALLEY area in order to kill, capture and destroy the enemy, his supplies and facilities.

8. Concept of Operation. Operation DEWEY CANYON was to be conducted as a phased operation. The below listed phases represent the commander's original concept. Modifications to this concept, resulting in the employment of three phases, vice four, are reflected in detail in paragraph 9 of this report.

a. Phase I: With FSB HENDERSON remaining open, FSB TUN TAVERN will be opened on D-2 and FSB SHILOH opened on D-1.

b. Phase II: Encompasses the assault of one infantry battalion (Rein), construction and occupation of an FSB within the 8KM fan of FSB SHILOH.

c. Phase III: Includes the assault of one infantry battalion (Rein), construction and occupation of an FSB within 8KM of of a supporting FSB; the displacement of Regimental Command Post and associated units and the artillery battalion headquarters.

d. Phase IV. Includes the assault of one infantry battalion (Rein) and the construction of an FSB within the CMI fan of a supporting FSB.

9. Execution

a. Phase I (all pre-D-day activity) included the reopening of three fire support bases with overlapping 8 KM artillery fans. These FSBs were to be used as stepping stones into the Dewey Canyon AO. FSB Henderson was reopened on 17 January with F/2/12 occupying it. FSB Tun Tavern was reopened on 20 January by D/2/12 and FSB Shiloh was reopened on 21 January by E/2/12. On 21 January, the Regiment was prepared for Phase II, which was to include two battalion-size heliborne assaults into the southern Da Krong Valley.

b. Phase II began on 22 January with an assault landing in the southern Da Krong Valley. This phase encompassed the opening of FSBs Razor and Cunningham, saturation patrolling north of Phase Line Red, and the opening of FSB Erskine.

11. Administrative Matters. The Administrative Plan for the operation was considered adequate.

a. Supply

(1) The VCB LSA was designated the primary resupply point for all classes of supply. However, realizing that weather in the objective area would be unpredictable/uncertain, the administrative plan further provided for utilization of the Quang Tri LSA as an alternate/emergency resupply point. As the operation progressed and inclement weather disrupted resupply operations from VCB, the emphasis for resupply of all classes of supply was shifted to the Quang Tri LSA. Weather continued to adversely affect resupply operations and neces itated utilization of Camp Evans as an alternate resupply point for artillery ammunition. Eventually, Camp Evans became the principle resupply point for the bulk of 105 artillery ammunition. A highlight of Operation Dewey Canyon in the field of logistics was the simultaneous use of all 3 LSAs mentioned above. Although difficult to implement, due primarily to communication and coordination problems, the concept proved invaluable throughout the operation and assisted greatly in maintaining the momentum of offensive operations despite extremely adverse weather conditions. There were three principal limiting factors during Operation Dewey Canyon that directly affected logistic support. Weather was undoubtedly the dominating factor. Anticipation of adverse weather underscores the need for staging sufficient quantities of rations on FSBs early in the operation. This fact was clearly recognized during the initial stages of the operation where nine days of inclement weather totally eliminated all helicopter resupply. However, since rations had been stockpiled on FSBs Razor and Cunningham, supplies there were immediately available to combat units. A planning factor of 5-8 battalion days is normally sufficient, in addition to a reserve, for occupants of each FSB. The second factor which limited resupply capability was an unusually long helicopter resupply route stretching in excess of 25 miles from VCB and some 30 miles from Quang Tri to the center of the objective area. This underscored the need for ensuring maximum use of available helicopter assets and requires establishment of precise and realistic priorities in view of the long resupply route. The CH-46 helicopter, the principal helicopter used for the resupply of rifle companies, was normally able to make only one lift per hour. The third limiting factor in relation to logistics was the availability of helicopter assets.

(2) Resupply during Operation Dewey Canyon was accomplished solely by helicopter, except where fixed wing air drops were used during periods of inclement weather. The percentage of recoverable drops averaged between 40-50%.

b. Maintainance. No significant maintainance problems were encountered.

c. Treatment of Casualties. Casualties were initially treated by Battalion Surgeons Hospital Corpsmen in the field and subsequently evacuated to Company "C", 3d Medical Bn at VCB or direct to 3d Medical Bn at Quang Tri. Weather and the severity of the individual's wounds were the predominant factors in determining the destination for medical evacuation. The CO, 3d Medical Bn requested evacuation of all casualties between facilities of the 3d Medical Bn, to other in-country medical facilities and to hospital ship(s). During inclement weather longer than normal lifesaving aid became a necessity due to the inability to medevac WIAs by helicopter. A special Aid Station established at FSB Cunningham proved invaluable in providing competent and highly effecient medical treatment and lifesaving care.

d. Communications

(1) General. During this operation the Communicatio Platoon provided communication support at FSB Razor, FSB Cunningham, VCB, Quang Tri, Hill 819 and Signal Hill. An additional relay station was placed on FSB Turnage for the retrograde movement.

Difficulties were encountered at FSB Razor when utilizing the AN/PRC-41. Several Beacon missions were aborted due to unreliable UHF communications. Four different AN/PRC-41s which were op-checked satisfactory, failed to improve the reliability of the system.

Due to distance and terrain masking, VHF communications from FSB Cunningham to VCB encountered problems. An MRC-110 was lifted to FSB Cunningham and solved the problems to our rear position at VCB but the circuit to TF Hotel did not improve until TF Hotel placed a radio on Signal Hill.

The UHF problem encountered at FSB Razor continued at FSB Cunningham. Three more AN/PRC-41s were utilized without success. An AN/MRC-87 was lifted to FSB Cunningham and the ARC-55 was employed without success. The mechanical and electrical components of this radio were in extremely poor condition and an op-check could not be completed at FSB Cunningham. Several beacon missions were completed utilizing the UHF radio contained in the ASRT equipment.

An internal wire system was installed and maintained at FSB Cunningham and linked to the in-country system via AN/TRC-97 with an AN/MRC-62 as back up. Initially the AN/TRC circuit quality was poor to unsatisfactory. Throughout the operation the circuit was plagued by power outage problems.

The MRC-62 circuit was marginal, when utilized, primarily due to frequency interference. Wiring of the relay vans at the TF Hotel terminal was a persistent problem. A Low Frequency Homer at FSB Cunningham caused interference on most VHF radio nets. Therefore it was activated only during emergency situations which required the system.

(2) Radio. Radio communications was maintained with the organic battalions and TF Hotel, at two jump CP's. From FSB Razor communications was maintained on Regt Tac 1, Div Tac 2A, and HF Admin Net. Communications with VCB were poor during the day but gained during the hours of darkness. There was no direct communications with 3rd Marine Division due to distance and terrain. An AN/MRC-110 was brought to FSB Cunningham to insure secure voice communications with the VCB area. An AN/MRC-87, received to give better UHF communications was found to be defective mechnically and electronically. Two new nets were added to facilitate the handling of logistics. These were: Regt Logistics Net, which provided communication with VCB, and Battalion Logistics Net which provided communications to the battalions.

(3) Radio Relay. The organic radio relay section was not employed during Operation Dewey Canyon. There were no shots planned or attempted. A PM schedule was followed to ensure the operational efficiency of the AN/TRC-27 equipment. Four new RT-252s were received during the month as replacements for combat loss and X-coded sets. An AN/TRC-97 and AN/MRC-62 had been emplaced prior to the arrival of the CP at FSB Cunningham. The AN/MRC-62 used as back up for the TRC-97 had fair communications with TF Hotel.

(4) Message Center. Message Center personnel maintained a courier service from 9th Marines rear at Quang Tri to 9th Marines forward at VCB. Traffic received at VCB message center from both the rear and TF Hotel was promptly processed and delivered to S-1 for further distribution. At the beginning of February, TF Hotel communication Center suggested installing a teletype circuit between themselves and 9th Marines communication center. The total incoming messages received were 3194. The total outgoing messages were 267. On the 9th Marines COC to 3rd Marine Division COC circuit 16 messages were received and none were sent. 9th Marines communication center total traffic handled for Operation Dewey Canyon was 3461.

(5) Wire. The Wire Section (-) at VCB, two wire teams, maintained satisfactory communications during Operation Dewey Canyon.

Upon arrival on FSB Razor wire communications were set up for all local subscribers. No land lines were abailable to the rear areas. Communications was loud and clear on all locals.

On completion of FSB Cunningham, the advance party set up two 5 pr cables. The purpose: Communications to the rear areas by means of radio relay (TRC-97 and MRC-62). On arrival of the CP from FSB Razor hotlines and remote lines were installed before switchboard subscribers. Upon completion of hot lines and remotes, all locals were installed and a 24 hour switchboard watch was activated. After all locals and hotlines were installed, alternate cables were laid to the TRC-97 and MRC-62 vans. Individual alternate lines were also installed for local subscribers. Communication during the operation was loud and clear with all locals.

Expenditure of wire was tallied at six miles with two RL-159s not used. Preventive maintenance was carried out weekly. Faulty gear was rotated to the rear section and replaced as soon as possible. Two SB-22s were stacked and contained locals.

12. Special Equipment and Techniques

a. Establishment of a Regimental TAC-LOG at FSB Cunningham enabled the Logistics Officer to work in close coordination with the Battalions, the Operations Officer, and the Air Liaison Officer. This procedure permitted the establishment of realistic priorities to minimize interference with tactical operations and to ensure maximum utilization of available helicopter assets. This further provided for more effective control and coordination of resupply operations.

b. A small Logistic Support Area was established at FSB Cunningham and was capable of resupplying eight rifle companies, daily, with combat essential supplies, i.e. Class I, water, batteries and selected items of Class V. Although not used extensively (due to inclement weather preventing adequate stockage) this concept was sound, particularly since the objective area was unusually distant from normal resupply points. This concept permits optimum use of helicopters in moving critical supplies short distances, thus often preventing the requirement for emergency resupply.

c. Utilization of 175mm cannisters as expeditionary water containers proved highly successful. Each cannister holds approximately 13 gallons of water and is not subject to leakage. Hypo-Chlorite solution is required for proper cleaning prior to use.

d. The Regiment used the HELP (Helicopter Emergency Lift Pack), designed by 3d Shore Party Bn as a low cost light-weight lifting device. This device may be substituted for the normal net/sling used in helicopter resupply and may be abandoned and written off at a considerably lower than normal cost if extraction of the lifting equipment is not possible.

e. Establishment of a helicopter transportable Aid Station at FSB Cunningham contributed immeasurably to the treatment of casualties when weather would not permit helicopter evacuation. The Aid Station was staffed by two corpsmen and the Regimental Surgeon.

f. A Forward ASRT was employed, on FSB Cunningham. Results were excellent and significantly extended TPQ range in the operating area. The ASRT provided our most responsive counterbattery capability during periods of darkness or inclement weather and extended our counterbattery capability against otherwise out-of-range enemy artillery. In addition a total of 6 ASRT controlled TPQ drops were made by CH-46 aircraft. 66% of all cargo was recovered.

g. A detachment from MABS 36 employed a portable low frequency beacon of FSB Cunningham to provide limited guidance for aircraft. One limitation, however, is the interference created on other radio bands located in the same general area.

h. A special Radio Detachment from the 1st Radio Battalion was deployed with the Regimental C.P. on FSB Razor and FSB Cunningham. This is the first time a unit of this type was deployed in a manner which offered minimum facilities and required rapid displacement. Intelligence obtained utilizing this capability was invaluable. For a detailed report on this units contribution, contact 1st Radio Battalion for the Dewey Canyon Special Intelligence Report.

13. Commander's Anaysis. Operation Dewey Canyon was unique for a combination of reasons, including: location, terrain, adverse weather, concept, and dramatic accomplishments. Accordingly, a proper analysis can best be made by a brief treatment of each of the major factors or problems pertaining to the operation. This approach follows:

a. Mission. On 14 January 1969, CG, 3rd Mar Div tasked CG, TF Hotel to "plan for a regimental-size search and clear operation in the subject area (lower Da Krong bounded by YD 1621, YD 1613, YD 2213, and YD 2221). D-day was to be "as soon as practicable after 22 January 1969, on order." CG, TF Hotel passed action to the 9th Marines. The mission ultimately assigned the 9th Marines was one deduced by the 9th Marines during the planning phase. Of interest is the fact that the task assigned in the 14 January message was considered by the 9th Marines a task to be accomplished early in an operation envisaged as larger in scope. During planning, the 9th Marines determined that ultimate objectives and the main thrust of the mission would be in an area considerably south of the area described in the 14 January message. However, this latter misson was not prescribed by the 9th Marines until the operation was well underway. The initial 9th Marines operation order provided primarily for the buildup of forces in the objective area. This degree of flexibility has been a hallmark of operations in the mountainous hinterland of the 3rd Mar Div AO and is essential where the enemy situation is obscure. This permits an operation to focus its effort as the enemy situation develops during an operation. As proof of this point, Dewey Canyon, which was orginally estimated to be about two to three weeks in duration, lasted almost two months, although much of the latter resulted from frequent periods of unfavorable weather.

b. Planning. The planning for Dewey Canyon, including publication of the operation order, consumed five days. During this period several visual reconnaissance flights were made over the objective area by all principles in the operation. By combination map inspection and visual reconnaissance, the regimental commander and CO 2/12 selected the final Fire Support Base sites. The planning period included briefings, detailed planning with 1st MAW representatives, joint selection of landing zones, logistic support preparation, acquisition of additional intelligence, and frequent liaison with all participating or supporting echelons, including visits to Hq XXIV Corps. Previous experiences in short-time planning and in similar operations greatly facilitated planning for Dewey Canyon.

c. Environment. A discussion of location, terrain and weather follows:

(1) Location. Dowcy Canyon was conducted in an area never previously penetrated by allied forces, bordered by the southern Da Krong Valley, the mountainous Laotian border, and the northern approaches to the A Shau Valley. The area was isolated approximately 50 airline kilometers from the nearest friendly forces. Consequently, time and space factors related to helicopter resupply and medical evacuation remained a problem throughout the operation, and during withdrawal from the area imposed great difficulties in achieving rapid extraction. The proximity of friendly forces to Laos, which formed the west and most of the south boundary of the AO, was a matter of continuous concern to the commander. Enemy forces of undetermined strength and composition, located in the Laotian sanctuary, posed a continuous threat of potentially great magnitude. Additionally, enemy artillery fired from positions in Laos persisted throughout the operation.

(2) Terrain. The rugged, jungle covered mountains in the Dowcy Canyon AO are as inhospitable and formidable as any in Vietnam. The enemy controlled and defended the high ground, e.g. Tiger Mountain, Tam Boi and Hill 1044. The area of high ground included the preponderance of AA defenses, harbored his major headquarters and supply caches, and was transited by his main supply route, 922/548. Accordingly, the high ground contained the regimental objectives for phase III. The enemy defended all approaches to the critical high ground, includin defenses out to a horizontal distance o seven kilometers. During the ground assault phase (Phase III), attacking forces fought upward from elevations of approximately 200 meters in the Da Krong Valley to heights in excess of 1200 meters at the final objective areas, a horizontal distance averaging seven kilometers. Therefore, the upward movement of forces was in itself a fatiguing, debilitating experience. In the 3rd and 1st Battalion's zones of action, there existed two long ridges/fingers leading to the high ground. Each of these battalions had two companies in the attack of each of the two ridgelines in their zone. This provided for commanding coverage over a fairly wide area. Most of the approach in the 2nd Battalion's area was restricted to a rather broad valley, although traversed generally over two axes. In summary, maximum effective use was made of the terrain, to develop the enemy situation and to gain access to the final objectives.

(3) Weather. Without question, weather was the factor of greatest influence during Dewey Canyon. It was completely unpredictable, whether from day to day or within a day. Adverse weather consisted primarily of extremely low cloud coverage and/or ground fog, resulting frequently in conditions of near zero visibility and zero ceiling in specific areas within the AO or the AO as a whole. In addition to one 10 day period, 31 January to 9 Febuary, in which no resupply occurred there were several 3 and 4 day periods of bad weather unworkable by helicopter. A typical ten day period would include two half days of good weather and three full days, the remainder being unworkable by helicopter. Over 50% of the time during Dewey Canyon, the regiment was faced with bad weather. Weather effected not only resupply, but fixed wing support and medical evacuation as well. Resupply limitations due to weather resulted in certain units on several occasions being limited to one meal per day for several days. There were instances of no meals for a day or two for several units. Resupply of infantry ammunition, radio batteries and water was a frequent problem as was personnel replacement. On several occasions, the on-position artillery ammunition levels were critically low, requiring rigid restriction on fires. In summary, on a day to day basis commanders at all echelons were required to weigh carefully the effects of weather on their operations, increasing or reducing the intensity of such operations as the weather dictated.

d. Intelligence. During planning and the early days of execution, intelligence concerning the enemy was of a general nature, e.g. increase in vehicular activity on Route 922/548, and significant increase in AA incidents along Route 922/548 and vicinity of Tiger Mountain. Axiomatically, most intelligence was developed within the regiment as the operation unfolded. Reconnaissance teams were placed in direct support of the regiment-a highly desirable arrangement for independent operations. Limited but effective use of reconnaissance teams was made in the northern part of the AO. This effort was limited by reduced helicopter support due to weather and competing requirements for helicopters for recon inserts elsewhere in the Div AO. Aerial observers were used extensively to pin-point enemy activity and to report on terrain. It can now be estimated that the enemy opposition during Phase III consisted of an infantry regiment reinforced (or major elements of 2 regiments, the 6th and 9th), an artillery regiment, including one AA battalion, and a regiment of rear services and transportation forces. His defenses were well prepared and formidable.

His resistance was determined. He reinforced areas under attack. He frequently counterattacked but with small units. He launched a sapper attack against FSB Cunningham and conventional attacks against both Cunningham and Erskine. He made extensive use of his artillery (122mm), rockets and mortars. On balance however, enemy opposition was far short of his full capability, due in large part to his disorganized command and control and the forcefulness and method of our attack. For example his AA fires, held in readiness for heliborne assault were never brought into full play.

c. Concept and Summary of Execution. The operation consisted of three phases.

(1) Phase I. This phase was aimed at getting established in the area, consisting of fire support base development and build-up of forces and supplies. Execution of this phase was a model of proficiency.

(2) Phase II. This phase consisted of two main tasks. First, operations were conducted to seek out and destroy the enemy in the northern part of the AO, that part which would become the rear when operations to the south (Phase III) commenced. Second, as Phase II progressed, the 2nd and 3rd Battalions were to methodically move into attack positions for Phase III and the 1st Battalion was to be inserted for the simultaneous commitment of all three battalions for Phase III. The movement to attack was well underway when 10 days of extremely bad weather set in. This necessitated the withdrawal of rifle companies to the vicinity of fire support bases or other areas of better mutual support and from which resupply of rations and ammunition could be made and better medical services rendered. Because of the uncertainty of the weather, this was a somewhat difficult decision to make. The decisio was made on the fourth day that the period of bad weather would be a prolonged one. It persisted for six more days. The 10 day delay brought a loss in momentum and afforded the enemy an opportunity to reinforce and improve his defenses.

(3) Phase III. As orginally conceived and later evaluated and reaffirmed during Phase II, this phase consisted of a hard-hitting regiment-in-the-attack operation. The prospects of a bold heliborne assault on or near the final regimental objectives appeared attractive in terms of terrain and proximity to objectives; however, the extensive enemy AA defenses in the area presented a potentially hazardous prospect.

Accordingly, the decision was made to avoid the AA threat by attacking overland, which in addition would uncover much of the AA defenses thus reducing the threat to resupply helicopters. Furthermore, a ground attack would assure greater coverage of the area and would develop the enemy situation. This decision was vindicated in that during the entire seven week period of Dewey Canyon only one helicopter was destroyed due to enemy AA and ground fires, although several helicopters sustained hits. The attack to the south was a brilliant display of fire and maneuver by all three battalions. Considering the terrain, unfavorable weather and the determined enemy resistance, casualties were kept to a minimum. The performances of the battalion commanders and their headquarters personnel were particularly noteworthy. Commanders did not operate from fixed command posts. The command posts were highly mobile, the commander and his staff moving with their attacking companies and sharing the same adversities and dangers. Marines proved again their capability for and the value of movement by foot.

f. Fire Support. The spectrum of fire support extended from organic infantry, mortars and 106mm recoilless rifles to B-52 ARCLIGHT strikes. Adverse weather frequently limited fixed wing support. Similarly, bad weather limited resupply of artillery ammunition, necessitating a reduction in artillery fires from time to time. On balance, however, fire support was superb. There were 27 ARCLIGHT missions flown in support of the operation. While most of these were a considerable distance from the battlefield, all unquestionably contributed to the success of the operation. Much of the enemy activity was canalized on Route 922, thus presenting targets vulnerable to TPQ controlled attack. The Air Support Radar Team (ASRT) located at Vandergrift Combat Base and the ASRT at FSB Cunningham provided excellent TPQ coverage. The ASRT on FSB Cunningham, which commenced operations on 27 February, is believed to be the first installed forward under field conditions. The heavy defensive installations employed by the enemy were prime targets for attack aircraft, proving once again the destructive capability of air. Recognizing the nature of the defenses and the fact that for several months the regiment had experienced comparatively limited familiarity with fixed wing support, the battalions at the outset were enjoined to make full use of attack air. As its effectiveness became increasingly evident, increased use was made of this fine weapon. Attack air support was responsive, close, and destructive, limited only by frequent periods of adverse weather. Artillery was highly effective in all of its tradional roles, including counter mortar/counter battery.

When ammunition levels permitted it, between four and five thousand rounds were fired daily, reaching a high in excess of 6000 rounds on one occasion. The enemy used the cover of darkness to attempt reinforcement or resupply of threatened areas or to withdraw from these areas. Artillery was particularly effective in interdicting these efforts. Aerial observers and TAC(A)s were invaluable as "eyes of the commander" and for control of air strikes and adjustment of artillery fires. They were absolutely essential in the counterbattery effort for their presence over the suspected enemy artillery position areas suppressed the enemy's fires, and in those occasions when the enemy risked firing, delivered accurate artillery fires and air strikes on the position.

g. Helicopter support. Helicopter support was severely limited due to extremely adverse weather conditions, although support was rendered on many occasions despite marginal weather. Considerable dependence was placed on U.S. Army CH-47 and CH-54 support for heavy lift, attesting to the need for an increase in the heavy lift capability of Marine air. The helicopter support performance during the critical last days of withdrawal challenged as it was by enemy artillery, mortar, AA and small arms fire, was a model of courage and professionalism. The same can be said for the numerous med-evac missions performed throughout the operation.

h. Communications. Communications within the regiment was outstanding, due to excellent equipment, proper employment of that equipment, and location of the Regimental CP. The voice cipher capability (PRC-77/KY-38) was particularly noteworthy, permitting the commander to provide rapid, secure control, facilitating reporting, and enabling instantaneous passage of perishable intelligence. The AN/PRC-41 (UHF) was unreliable throughout the operation. A radio relay system (AN/TRC-97) with a AN/MRC-62 as back up was installed early at the regimental CP on FSB Cunningham. These systems initially encountered generator, fuel resupply and certain operational problems. After these problems were reduced, the radio relay proved to be a highly valuable asset. Communications from higher headquarters to the regiment was tenuous throughout the operation, including periods when communications between the Regimental CP and the 9th Marines Rear at VCB was satisfactory.

i. Personnel Replacements. In anticipation of a possible substantial casualty rate, plans were made early in the operation for an increase in personnel replacements for the battalions and for the expeditious handling of replacements. Again, adverse weather imposed considerable problems in transporting personnel to the field, resulting in several units operating for several days below a desired strength level. Notwithstanding the personnel chain prescribed by the M series T/O, the Regimental Headquarters gave up the S-3 Alfa, S-2 Alfa and a Gunnery Sergeant to the battalions during the operation.

j. Medical. Because of earlier experiences with unfavorable weather and mountain operations, the Regimental Surgeon and the Battalion Surgeons met during November 1968 to develop a helicopter transportable medical capability for emplacement of fire support bases to provide for a maximum feasible lifesaving capability in the field, should helicopter medical evacuation not be possible. While this would not be readily available to widely dispersed units on the move, it would provide some assistance. Such a facility was emplaced on FSB Cunningham. It proved to be of great value in the treatment of casualties at FSB Cunningham resulting from incoming artillery, rocket and mortar fires and the sapper attack of early morning 17 Febuary. Battalion Surgeons accompanied their battalions, moving on foot during Phase III, and providing, as a consequence, invaluable service.

k. Resupply. As mentioned earlier, adverse weather seriously affected the resupply of attacking units and artillery ammunition. The problem, in part, was anticipated and a very substanial amount of artillery ammunition and rations was moved to FSB Shiloh on 21 and 22 January. This was accomplished while the weather was good and later permitted resupply of these items within the AO when the weather in the AO was workable and the weather at VCB was unworkable. Futhermore, it reduced helicopter turn around time, thus permitting a rapid resupply within the AO when a surge effort was required. FSB Shiloh closed on 10 Febuary. A Regimental "TAC-LOG" was established on FSB Cunningham to establish resupply priorities and facilitate the requesting and control of resupply. Mid-way in the operation a mini-LSA was established on FSB Cunningham to provide for the rapid resupply of critical items to attacking units. A Tactical Airfield Fuel Dispensing System (TAFDS) was established on FSB Lightning (ARVN) to preclude the requirement for gunships to return to VCB or Quang Tri for refueling, thus ensuring continuous gunship availability in the AO. While an excellent idea and of some value, problems were encountered which reduced the effectiveness of the TAFDS.

l. Operations in Laos. On 21 Febuary the 2nd Battalion was ordered to interdict Route 922 at a point approximately 1500 meters inside Laos. The results were most impressive-

3 enemy trucks were destroyed (including one with 5 tons of ammunition headed for the battlefield) and 10 enemy were killed without a single loss of life to the ambushing force. While the ambush itself was dramatic and effective, its real value lay in the leverage it provided to request a continuation of operations in Laos - leverage in terms of precedent, success and value. Accordingly, the following message was forwarded to higher headquarters from the CO 9th Marines:

> 1. During periods of limited visibility, Arclights, fixed wing and unobserved arty fires have been unable to prevent enemy use of Route 922. This fact supported by AO track and vehicle sightings during day and vehicle noises detected by friendly forces at night.
> 2. As ground elements approached Vietnam-Laos Border and vicinity Route 922, enemy use of subject Route became matter of increasing concern. Specifically, enemy's capability to reinforce and resupply battl field would have seriously endangered security of my forces which have been in heavy contact in vicinity of border and Route 922 (XD 1903) and elsewhere in 9th Marines zone. Additionally, intelligence confirms enemy would attempt to move arty pieces from battlefield via Route 922 to secure positions in Laos from which fires could be delivered on my forces.
> 3. Accordingly, on 21 Feb I ordered 2/9 to interdict/ambush Route 922 in the vicinity of XD 1302 and position elements to bring observed arty fires and air on subject road. The successful results of this action have been reported separately. Among other things, 5 tons of ammo destined for battlefield destroyed.
> 4. Urgently request authority to maneuver into Laos as required, from north south grid line 10 to north south grid line 25 and north of east west grid line 02. This is generally 2000 meter extension and includes Route 922. Request based on immediate and constant danger to my forces as discussed herein and intelligence that continues to fix enemy infantry and arty in area of extension requested.

5. Put another way, my forces should not be here if ground interdiction of Route 922 not authorized.

The authority requested was approved and elements of the 9th Marines operated successfully in Laos until the end of Dewey Canyon, albeit most of the operations in later stages were on the border or just inside Laos.

m. Summary Analysis. The success of Operation Dewey Canyon stemmed from several factors, worthy of recognition here. First, it was conducted pursuant to the long established concept of the CG 3rd Mar Div, that the enemy would be attacked whenever and wherever he appeared in the Division AO, proving once again the value of carrying the attack to the enemy. In this connection, the success can be measured in the many principles of war observed, particularly: the objective; the offense; mass; economy of force; surprise; and mobility. Second, the unit integrity of the 9th Marines was restored in July 1968, thus ensuring a high degree of unit cohesion and esprit. Third, since July 1968, the 9th Marines (Rein) had operated almost exclusively in the rugged mountains of Quang Tri Province thus being mentally and physically prepared for the rigors of Dewey Canyon and bringing to that operation numerous techniques and skill in mountain warfare.

Finally, the laudatory comment expressed by CG XXIVth Corps is in itself an analysis;

"Dewey Canyon deserves some space in American military history by sole reason of audacity, guts and magnificent interservice team play. There was a calculated gamble on weather, and for the most part, it was won. If the weather had held throughout, the greater momentum would have made surprise complete, with proportionately greater results. But the troops pressed on through marginal weather, enduring real privation. And somehow minimum essential supply and evacuation went on.

"I cannot applaud too highly the airmen of the 1st Marine Aircraft Wing in a variety of dangerous roles, the 101st Airborne Division HOK Company dedicated to the operation, the fighter pilots (Marine and Air Force) who managed to penetrate the overcast and deliver devastating close air support and effective interdicting blows.

"Above all, though, a Marine regiment of extraordinary cohesion, skill in mountain warfare and plain heart made Dewey Canyon a resounding success.. As an independent regimental operation projected 50 kilometers (as the crow flies) from the nearest base and sustained in heavy combat seven weeks, it may be unparalleled. Without question, the 9th Marines' performance represents the very essence of professionalism."

14. Recommendation. That any future evaluation of Marine Corps doctrine for helicopterborne operations and optimum force structure include a detailed analysis of Operation DEWEY CANYON, including lessons learned and special techniques employed.
