PART IINARRATIVE SUMMARY

During the period 1 September to 4 September 1968 the battalion command group remained in a static position at VCB while the Rifle Companies were chopper OPCON to other battalions to assist in their assigned missions. On 4 September 1968, with the Companies again under their control, 3d Battalion, 9th Marines was ordered to participate in a multi-battalion operation northwest of THON SON LAM Combat Base. Delayed five days due to typhoon conditions the battalion commenced lifting from VCB at 090945H.

Conducting a heli-assault in the vicinity of (XD903588) at 091130H the battalion immediately made heavy contact. Co K in the lead moved aggressively through the enemy position, forcing the enemy to retreat, leaving behind their dead and much equipment. Throughout the following days the battalion swept west moving by leaps and bounds with first one company and then another in the lead. On 18 September 1968 Co M moved to LZ WINCHESTER to provide local security for the 9th Marine Regimental Command Post.

In a three day period from 17 September to 20 September 1968 a huge enemy cache was discovered by the Battalion which included over 10,000 82mm mortar rounds, 12,000 Chicom hand grenades and 225,000 rounds of 7.62mm ammunition. This cache is reported to be one of the largest discoveries of enemy munition and equipment in the [redacted] This discovery created much interest as was apparent by the number of visitors at the battalions position prior to the destruction of the cache.

Beginning on 27 September 1968 the weather became increasingly bad. Due to heavy rain and adverse weather conditions, operations were limited to short probing patrols. Further search of the area failed to reveal any additional finds of significance. The end of the month found the battalion preparing to depart their zone of action.

ient numbers to maintain the Battalion strength at a satisfactory level.

1. Intelligence

(1) Weather

UNCLASSIFIED

a. Temperature - The average high temperature for the period was 87 degrees fahrenheit. The average low temperature was 76 degrees fahrenheit.

b. Winds - The average wind speed was 12 knots West by South West in the first part of the reporting period, shifting to an average 8 knots generally East by North East in the middle and latter parts of the reporting period.

c. Precipitation - There was an increase in the rainfall intensity during the month of September, with seven days seeing an inch or more of rain. Rainshowers and thundershowers were commonplace, with the average total rainfall for the period being 25 inches (although almost half of this total was accounted for by the typhoon which deluged the area for four days).

d. Humidity - The average relative humidity was 79 per cent.

e. Clouds - Cloudiness increased again towards the July maximum after a slackening off during August. The cover was generally scattered and broken in the morning from 3000 to 8000 feet, with the ceiling dropping in the afternoon and evening to between 5000 and 3000 feet. The average cloud cover was usually better than 600 per cent.

f. Visibility - The average visibility for the period was 6 miles, while the visibility in the mountainous operation area was greatly reduced due to the low cloud cover.

g. Effects of the weather on troops - While operating under the monsoon type conditions the weather greatly affected the movement and comfort of the troops. Visibility and observation were cut to minimum which in turn greatly hampered observation of fires, air strikes and greatly hindered resupply efforts. Medevacs, at times, were required to wait for hours on the landing zone awaiting breaks in the weather for helicopters.

(2) Terrain

a. In general, the terrain within the AO can best be described as primary jungle with extremely dense vegetation leading to a double canopy 75 to 100 feet above the ground. The ground itself was rugged mountain terrain, extremely steep with a very narrow crest.

b. Observation and fields of fire were generally poor except in those areas where landing zones had been cleared. In those places observation was excellent.

c. Cover and concealment - This area provided excellent cover and concealment for movement and in those areas where trails were encountered and used the canopy and dense vegetation still provided a good deal of cover and concealment.

d. Obstacles: The greatest natural obstacles in the area were the mountains and dense vegetation. There were also numerous booby-traps encountered throughout the area.

e. Key terrain features - The key terrain features in the area were Hill 463 at XD886578, Tien Hill at XD895588 and Hill 715 at XD851593.

f. Avenues of approach - The major avenues of approach were from the North along heavy trail complexes and from the east along the Cam Lo River Valley.

g. Helicopter landing zones - as follows

LZ WINCHESTER	XD905589	1 CH46
LZ LAMBER	XD898588	1 CH46
LZ MINIAL	XD887587	1 CH46 (2 wheel landing)
LZ AUD	XD884573	1 CH46
LZ CHART	XD876574	1 CH46
LZ TILL	XD883584	1 CH46
LZ COYOTE	XD869594	1 CH46
LZ CROCOD	XD865591	1 CH46

(3) Enemy

Enemy situation - From the amount and type of gear captured it is felt this area was a staging/supply area for a Regimental size unit reinforced with a sniper unit and having a medical company attached. The order of battle indicated elements of the 52nd Regiment, 320th Division, was located to the north-west, and in a position to reinforce the 52nd Regiment within 48 hours. It is an area that the enemy seemed to appear confident in and undoubtedly attempt to reoccupy.

b. Enemy activity - The enemy has used this area extensively for staging areas, training areas, regimental size supply area and rocket site against Vandegrift Combat Base and the Rockpile. He was extremely well organized and aggressive. His battle plan was to initiate contact with DH-10 mines and then fight a small size delaying actions from well constructed bunkers as he fell back along the length of the ridge.
