II. ENEMY LOCATIONS AND CAPABILITIES

1. Based on PW interrogations, document exploitation and other sources the following general locations of enemy units are given:

Unit	Str	Loc	Date
70th NVA Bn	120	BS5144	18 Nov 70
C212 (LF) Co (QN)	50	BS5238	16 Sep 70

2. The Dong-Xuan campaign to defeat the Saigon government pacification program began in late Dec. Preparation for this campaign began as early as Sep for the Quang Ngai Province forces. Of the three normal aspects of the enemy campaigns, the political is probably the most important. However, in the area covered by the operations order and overlay, the economic factor becomes predominant. In this area it is suspected that food is being grown and transported by local forces (possibly Mont.) to support larger (MF or NVA) units operating to the north and east.

3. All reports of enemy intentions indicate a concentration on the pacification program, in particular the refugee camps, RF/PF units, outposts and GVN installations. Current assignments of enemy strength indicate the ability to conduct limited sapper attacks and indirect fire attacks.

4. The Dec high point of enemy activity did not develop as expected due to Allied operations. The enemy is now believed to be in a training/preparing posture for Tet. The Tet offensive rehearsals should begin soon with an increase of reconnaissance by local force units and occupation of final staging areas by MF/NVA units sometime in January.

5. Aside from rehearsals, some indications of the actual time for the beginning of the Tet offensive which Allied units should be alert for include: establishment of new hospitals in forward areas, purchase of rice cakes or meats for early celebration of Tet, restriction of civilian travel in certain areas and an increase in the number of Hoi Chanhs. (For example, C/4-3 recently captured a complete medical kit, indicating a possible build-up of medical supplies in anticipation of Tet.) No single incident is conclusive; it is only through the reporting of all incidents of the type mentioned above that an accurate intelligence estimate for the up-coming Tet offensive can be made.

III. CLIMATIC SUMMARY FOR JANUARY

- JANUARY*
1. During JANUARY the northeast monsoon develops to its fullest extent. Cloudiness and precipitation occur on the windward slopes of the major mountain range (Annam) and along the east coast, resulting in generally poor weather in this region.
 2. January mean temperatures are the lowest of the year. Daily high's are in the mid 70's and daily lows are in the upper 60's. Ground fog tends to form over local "cold spots" earlier in the evening than it does in the surrounding areas.
 3. Relative humidity remains high causing favorable conditions for mildew, corrosion and decay of susceptible items.
 4. During Jan, an average of 3-5 days with an inch or more of rain and 15-20 days of measureable rainfall can be expected at most locations along the coast. Average precipitation varies from 8-14 inches along the coast to 25-30 inches in exposed mountain locations. Thunderstorms are nearly non-existent.
 5. During Jan, cloudiness decreases from the maximum of Dec. Ceilings below 1500 feet occur frequently along the eastern regions. These low ceilings have a tendency to lift with the day's warming except during periods of strong northeast flow. These periods last generally no longer than 3 days and are usually followed by 1-3 days of scattered clouds in the coastal regions and broken to scattered clouds in the mountains.
 6. During a period of strong northeast flow visibility can be as low as $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ mile in the drizzle and fog along the coast and as low as zero in places which may become completely enclouded. During the improved weather periods which generally follow the northeast "surges", visibility may increase to 2-4 miles during the night and early morning and to 4-7 miles during the day.
 7. Fog is as frequent in January as in December. It occurs on nearly 60% of the days, mostly in the morning hours, but it may persist all day.
