

"The 25th's 25th ... in Combat"

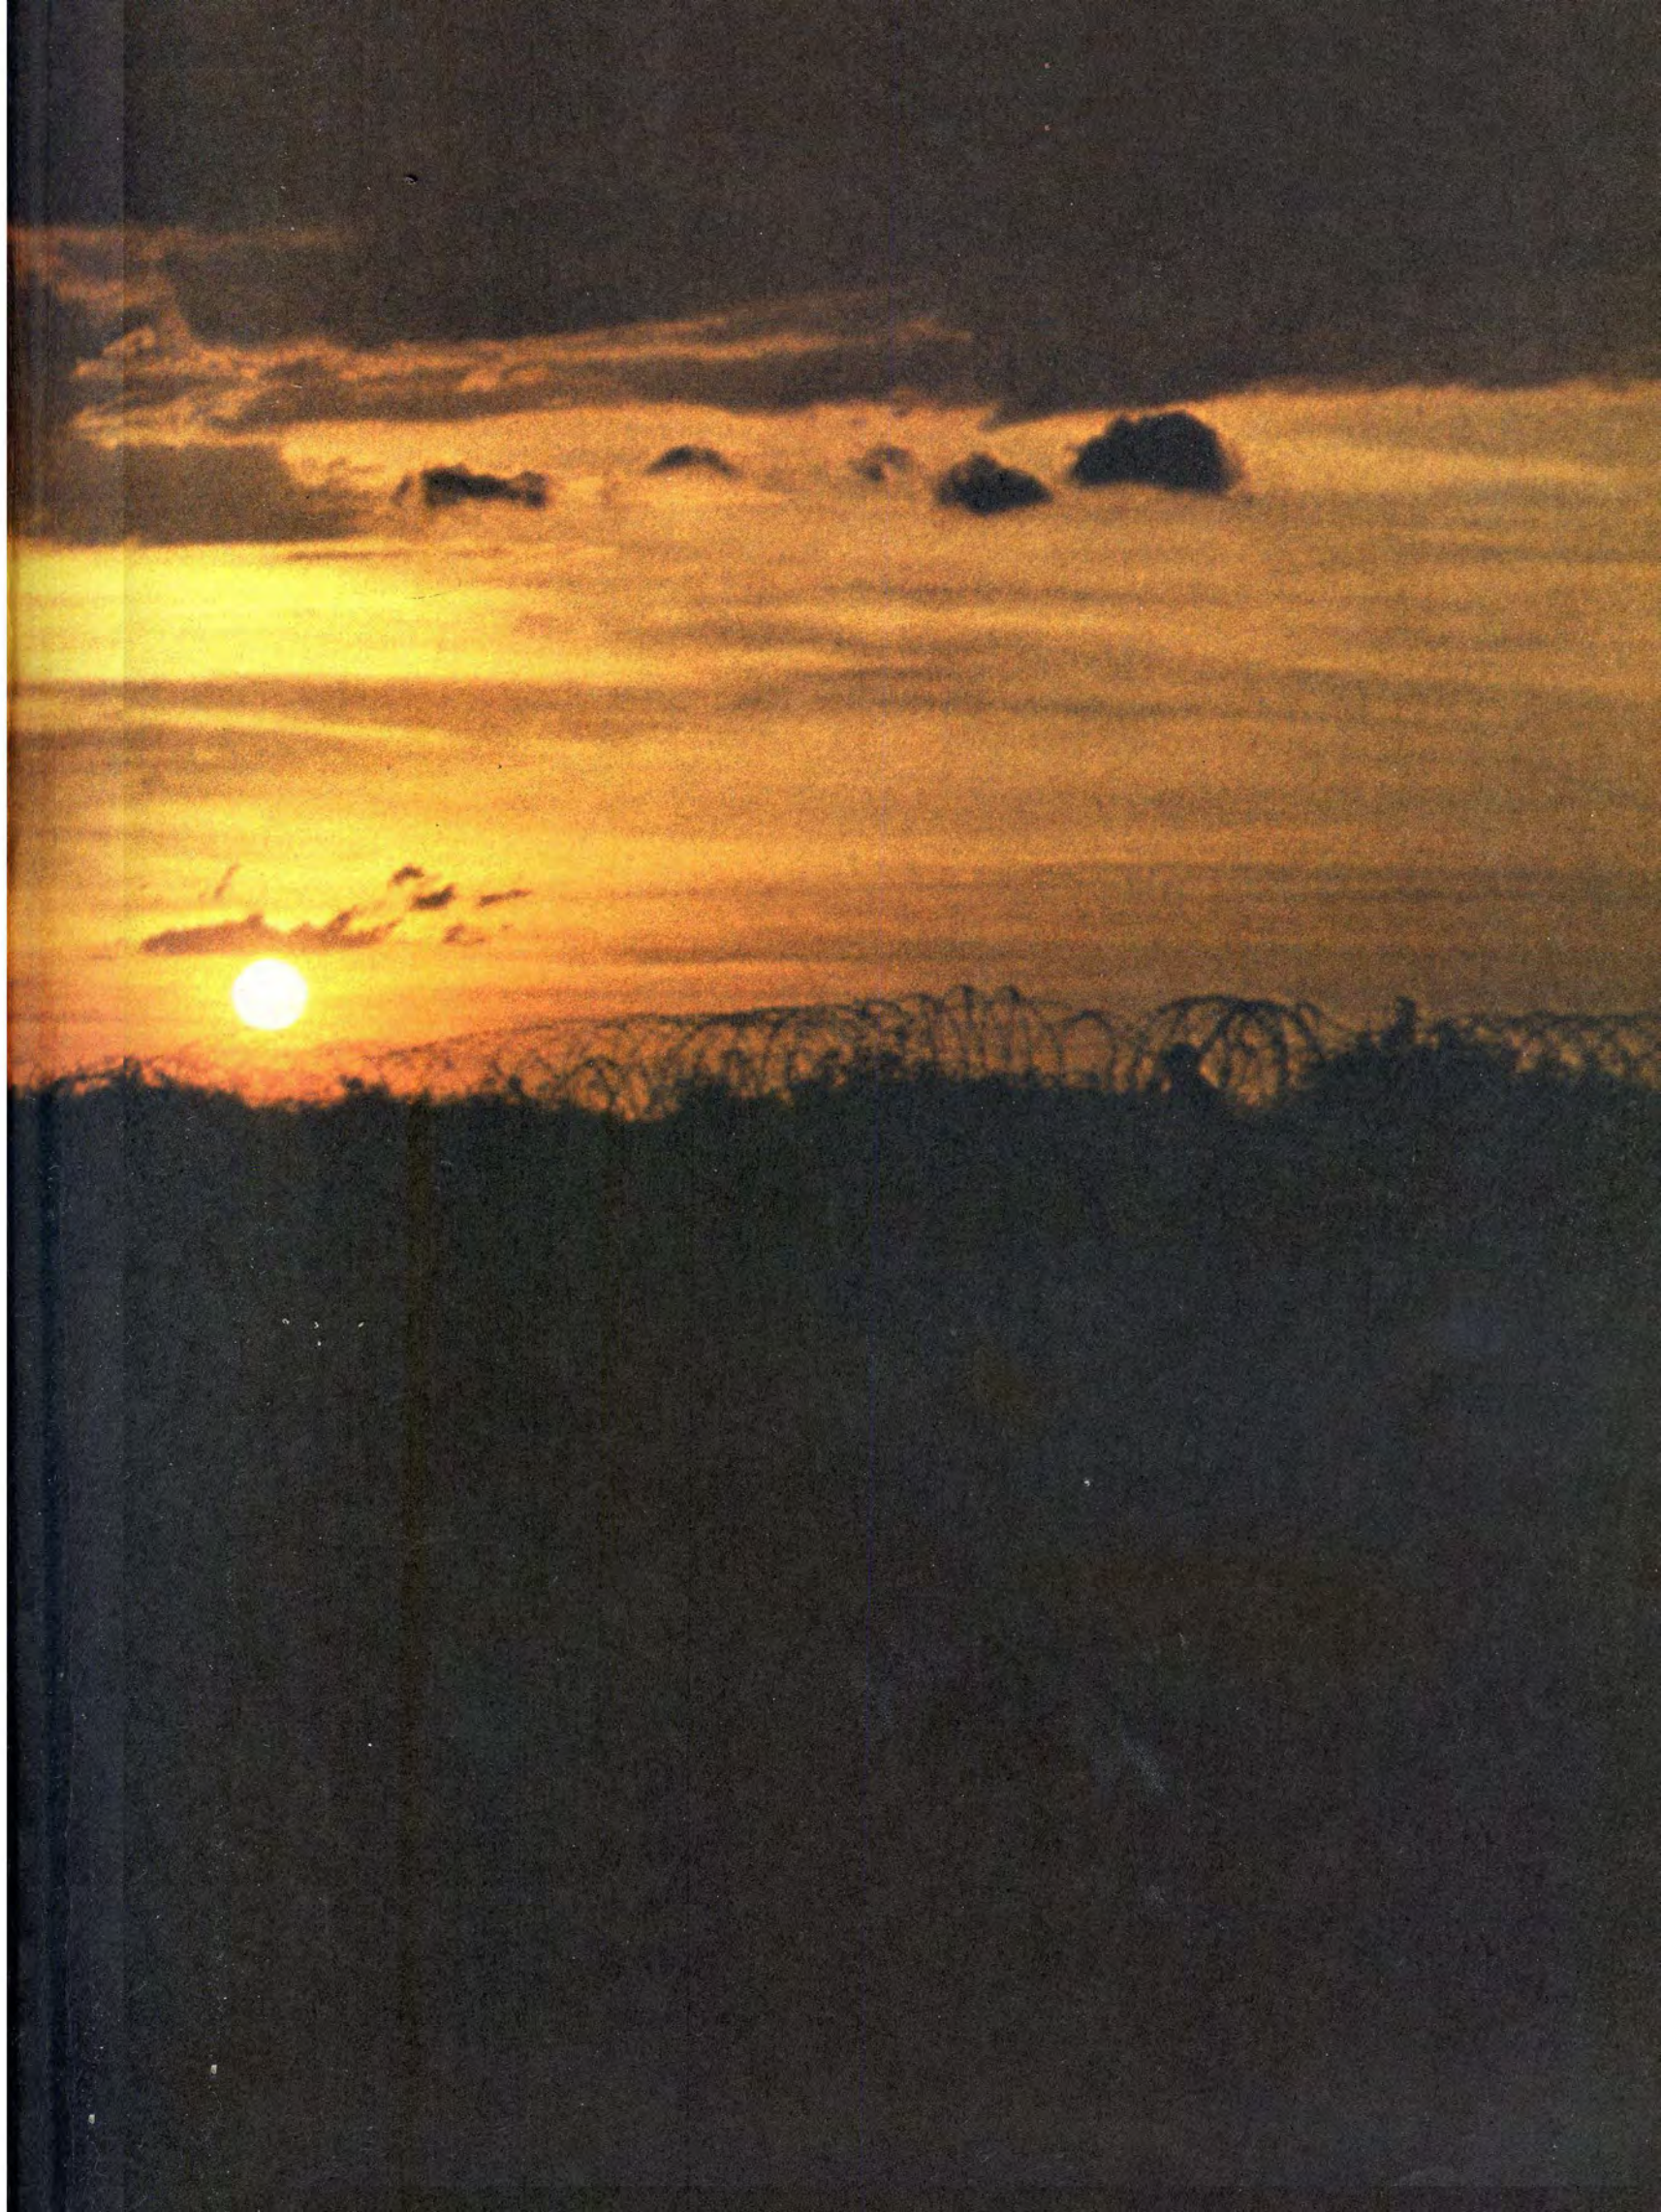

TROPIC LIGHTNING

1 Oct 1941 - 1 Oct 1966

25th Infantry Division

In a moment, the sounds of hell will shatter the solicitude of a peaceful day.
Bullets will rip through soft breezes while tense bodies advance in search of danger.
The crude contrivance of an ingenious enemy will split the formation, disrupt the activity, whet the appetite.
An inspired soldier will answer the call to arms and boundless energies of a razor-sharp force will be unleashed against the ruthless opponent.
The rapid response from the alert rifleman . . .
The sudden burst of artillery . . .
The devastating airstrike . . .
And then silence.

The sun will seep along its westward path and the darkness of night will prevail upon vigilant eyes . . .

Eyes which know the ugly face of death,
know the end results of an aggressive tyrant, know the rewards of a world where choice and freedom dictate the way of life.

The triumphs of each day will build the faith of an imperiled society, strengthen the cause for freedom, instill the hope of ultimate peace. . . .

This is the story of the 25th Infantry Division, written by the man who wears the "Tropic Lightning" patch, skilled through the rigors of intensive field training, matured by the strains of combat . . . in three wars.

It's a story of dedication, determination . . . and courage.

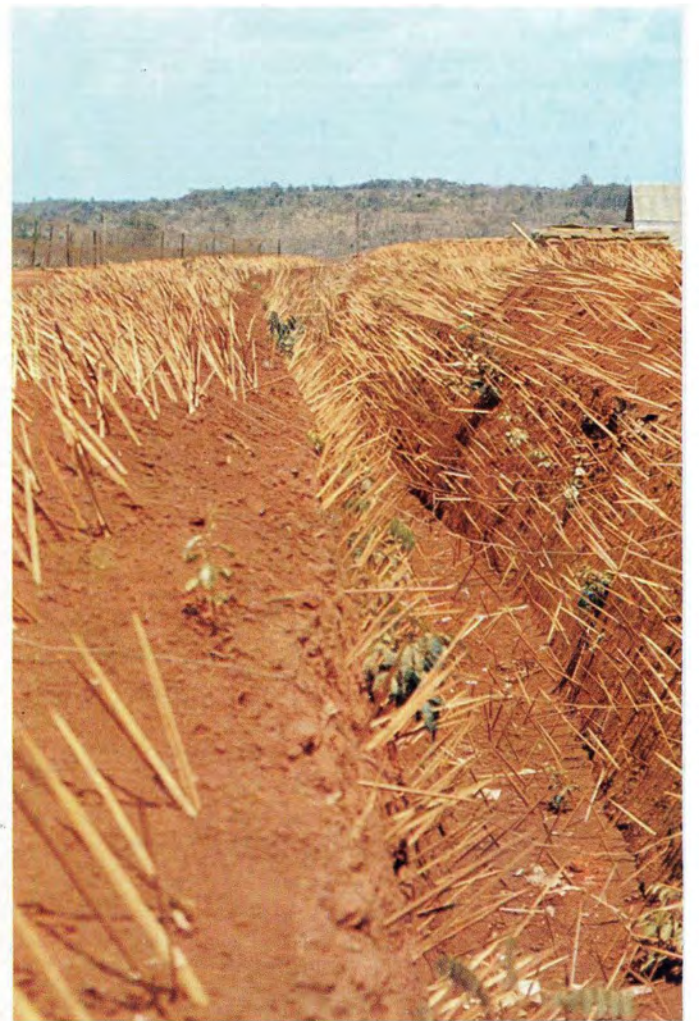

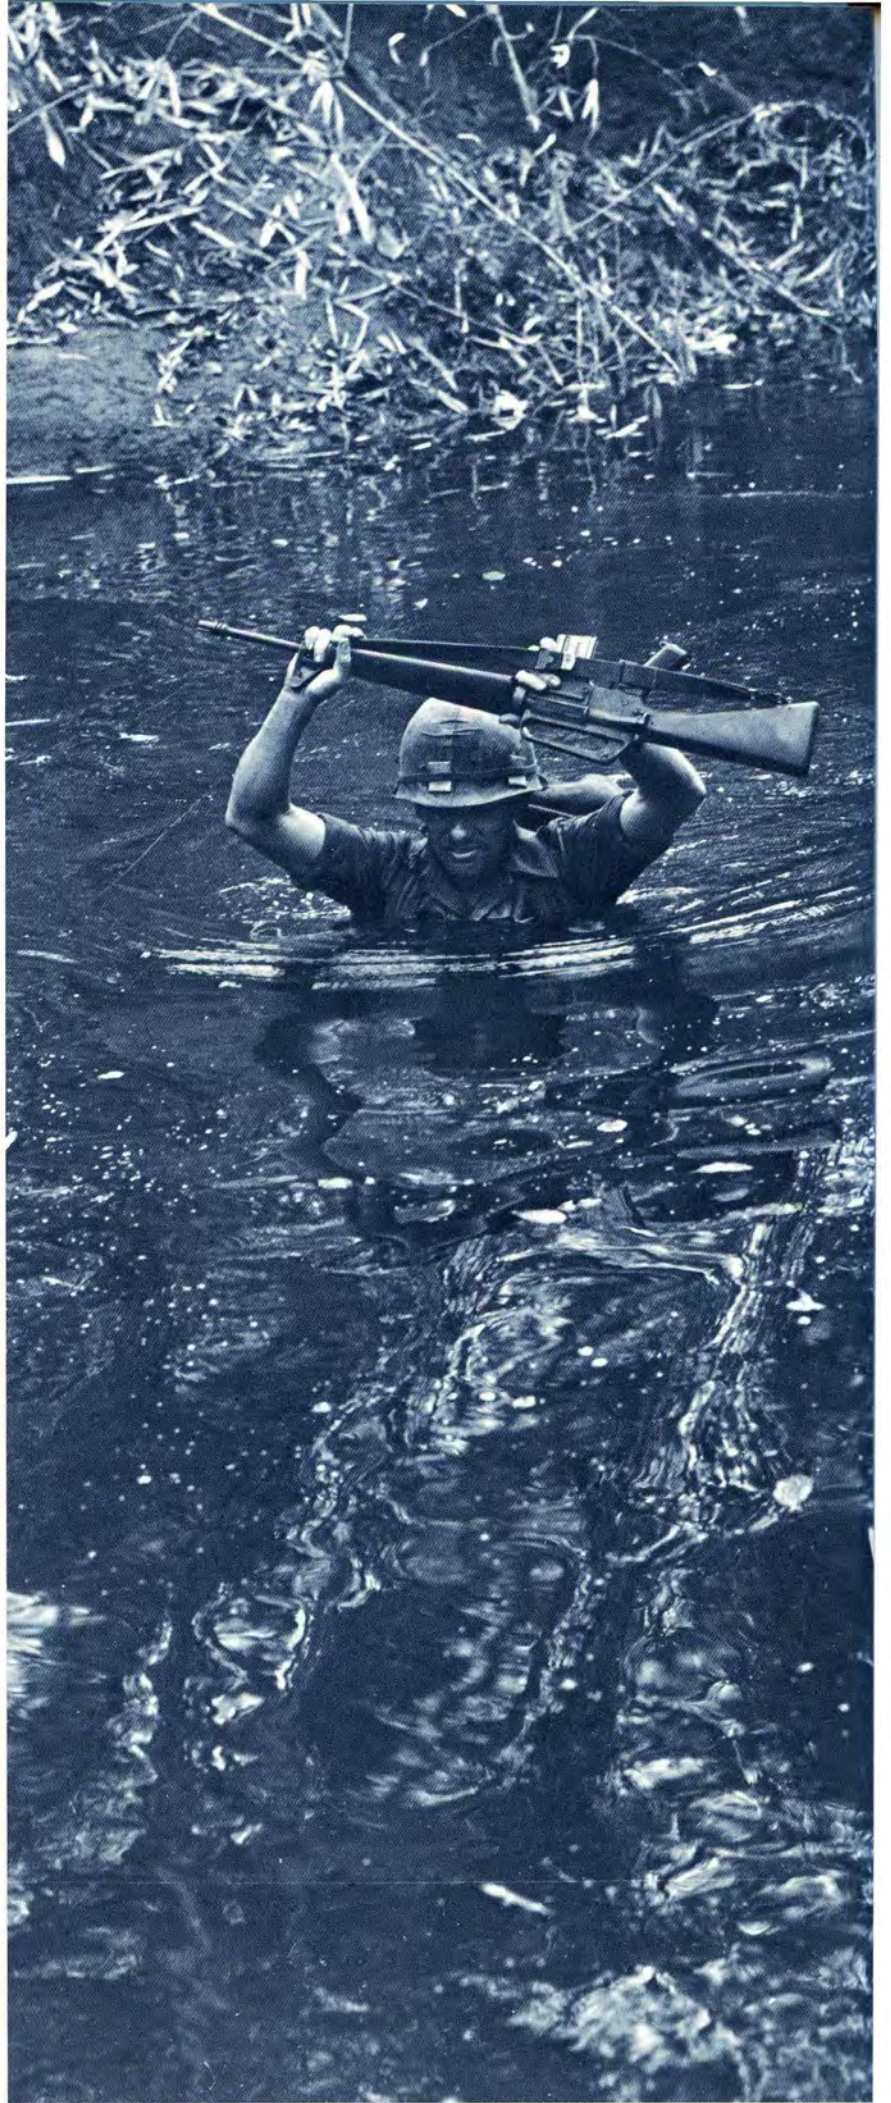

They call it "Hell's Half Acre" because of the fierce fighting which has taken place where the 25th Infantry Division now has its base camp.

Before the "Tropic Lightning" arrived, it was a sanctuary. The Viet Cong came to the Cu Chi area to rest and relax after a hot battle in the field. It was also a good base of operations for "Charlie," only 20 miles northwest of Saigon.

Other soldiers had passed through the area but none had attempted to stay. And when the 25th Division tried to do what no other division had yet done, they found that it was not an easy assignment.

Closer to the Boi Loi Woods than any other U.S. Army division in Vietnam, the "Tropic Lightning" cut their way through bamboo, waded through rice paddy after rice paddy, to claim their piece of real estate at Cu Chi.

They found snipers popping from "spider holes," crawling through tunnels, shooting from treetops, hiding in graveyards. After three weeks of harassment by enemy snipers, mines and mortars, the 2nd Brigade had carved a substantial home away from home out of a Viet Cong stronghold.

Those first weeks of battle were long and bloody, but not without the valor and heroism the 25th Infantry Division had carried through two previous wars.

Infantrymen worked 24 hours a day, searching and clearing, digging foxholes, building bunkers—forcing the enemy to retreat farther and farther from his "sanctuary," depriving him of his supplies and his underground home.

"Tropic Lightning" artillery and mortar rounds keep "Charlie" on the move. In many cases, the firepower from the Division's base camp has been so overwhelming that some of the enemy have completely given up and turned themselves over to the friendly forces. Tank and track crews advance through the jungles and swamps, clear roads and prove daily to "Charlie" their intent to stay until the mission is accomplished.

During the short span of time the Division has been in Vietnam, "Tropic Lightning" soldiers have carried the traditions of success in past wars to such places as the Boi Loi Woods, HoBo Woods, Bao Trai, Trung Lap and Trang Bang in the south, and Ban Me Thout, Buon Brieng, Duc Co, and the Mangyang Pass in the north.

Stories of the valiant soldiers of World War II and Korea are repeated over and over again.

There is the story of Danny Fernandez, a rare young man admired by his contemporaries—quiet, cheerful, competent, unselfish. While on a search and destroy mission with C Company, 1st Battalion (Mechanized), 5th Infantry, Fernandez and his buddies were in a battle position when a grenade came flying in. Fernandez immediately jumped on it and covered it with his own body, shielding the others from the blast.

Acts and deeds of heroism are recorded wherever the "Tropic Lightning" operates in Vietnam.

The latest chapter in the story of the 25th Infantry Division begins in a land where tanks meet ox carts at every crossroad, a country where war has become a way of life, a nation on the threshold of progress and prosperity. "Tropic Lightning" soldiers today in Vietnam are contributing to the cause for freedom, the hope of peace, the triumph over communism.

You walk for mile on endless mile alongside the tired, dust-caked infantryman, and still you never understand what it is that keeps him going long after the ordinary human being would have dropped.

Perhaps the simple answer is that the soldier is no ordinary human being. But neither is he a machine. He is a finely-honed instrument who, at the moment of complete exhaustion or fear, can be rekindled to commit great acts of endurance or personal courage.

It's all explained in acts like the 25th Infantry Division medic who patched up his own bullet hole in his side, and then went back out into the field of fire to tend to other wounded men.

If I live to the golden old age, I'm sure I'll never see acts of endurance and courage to surpass those the men of the "Tropic Lightning" have displayed in barely-known places of Vietnam like Cu Chi, Buon Brieng, Bao Trai, Phuoc My, and others.

Nobody ever gave the 25th Division men a piece of land free in combat, neither in World War II, Korea or Vietnam. They fought to own the real estate they came to live on. In return, all they asked was an occasional good night's sleep, a creek in which to wash off the grime, and a letter from home.

Good men from "Hawaii's Own" Division have fallen in Vietnam, but good men also carry on in their footsteps.
So it has gone, for 25 years of proud history of the 25th.

Some day soon, it's hoped, the "Tropic
Lightning" will come back home to Hawaii.
When and if it does, I'd like to be among the first at the docks to say: "Hats off, a brave soldier of the 25th Division is passing by."

Bob Jones
THE HONOLULU ADVERTISER

Halfway around the world, away from homeland, thousands of miles from those they love and cherish, there is a select group of dedicated men who now carry the burdens of freedom, the hope for a better way of life, the faith of a great nation . . . to the people of Vietnam. Some have given all they had to give for their cause; all have given more than asked.

Strangers to the men of the "Tropic Lightning" rarely understand the display of dedication which takes place daily on the fields of battle. To the quarter of a million who have served with the 25th Infantry Division, dedication to duty is the mark of a "Tropic Lightning" soldier.

Men of the 25th Infantry Division have never found a task too difficult, never left a job undone, never stopped long enough to say, "I've done all I can." Today in Vietnam, the determination of fighting men in the "Tropic Lightning" Division prevails in every military operation, from Cu Chi to Pleiku. The wounded soldier assisting the more seriously wounded, the battle-weary in pursuit of greater triumph, the quick response of a tired but unwavering mind are just a few illustrations of "Tropic Lightning" determination.

Determination

TO THE OFFICERS AND MEN OF THE 25TH INFANTRY DIVISION

As the 25th Infantry Division completes a quarter century of outstanding service, the present members of the Division may take justifiable pride in their accomplishments.

Soldiers of the "Tropic Lightning" Division were the first American ground forces to engage the enemy in World War II, and among the first to enter combat in the Korean War. Now again you men of the 25th are in the vanguard, meeting today's challenge in Vietnam.

By your professional skill, courage, and dedication, the proud traditions of the Division and of all American fighting men are continued and enhanced.

I congratulate and commend each of you as the 25th Infantry Division plays a vital role in our national defense. The United States is proud of you.

TO THE OFFICERS AND MEN OF THE 25TH INFANTRY DIVISION

On behalf of the men and women of the United States Army, I extend hearty congratulations and best wishes to all members of the 25th Infantry Division on the occasion of its twenty-fifth anniversary.

To each of us the Taro Leaf with Bolt of Lightning symbol is a reminder of the courage, the competence, and the ability of American fighting men. Those who wear the patch today do so with pride as they uphold the battle-earned traditions of the Division, forged over the past quarter of a century on the battlefields of World War II and Korea.

Once again, the "Tropic Lightning" Division has taken its place in the forefront of the struggle against oppression and for the freedom and dignity of man.

All members of the Army join me in paying tribute to your achievements and expressing confidence in your ability to meet successfully the challenge of the future.

HAROLD K. JOHNSON
General, United States Army
Chief of Staff

Of all the assets of a fighting division, courage is most important. When all else fails, courage prompts the mind to greater victory, responds to the challenge of immediate action, strengthens the will to succeed despite all hazards.

If landmarks could be placed at every junction where men of the "Tropic Lightning" Division have exhibited this virtue of all virtues, they would span the Pacific—from Hawaii to Guadalcanal, from New Georgia to Luzon, from Japan to Korea, from the Ho Bo Woods to the central highlands of Vietnam.

Courage

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE 25TH INFANTRY DIVISION

On behalf of the members of the United States Army, Pacific, I extend hearty congratulations and best wishes on the occasion of the silver anniversary of the 25th Infantry Division.

Activated in Hawaii some two months before the attack on Pearl Harbor, your division repeatedly justified its name "Tropic Lightning" in the defense of Honolulu, the capture of Guadalcanal, and the liberation of the Philippines. After five years of post-war occupation duty in Japan, the 25th Division saw long and illustrious service in Korea beginning with the defense of the Pusan Perimeter and continuing throughout the combat phase and after the Armistice. Now your battle-tested division is again in the thick of the fight in the defense of the Free World's frontiers in Vietnam.

Knowing the proud, quarter century history of the 25th Division as I do, I have the utmost confidence that the men who wear the Lightning patch will continue to uphold the finest traditions of the United States Armed Forces. Again, congratulations on your silver anniversary. May you celebrate many more.

TO THE OFFICERS AND MEN OF THE 25TH INFANTRY DIVISION
(TROPIC LIGHTNING)

The Silver Anniversary of the 25th Infantry Division is rightfully a day of pride for the thousands of men who now wear, or have worn, the world famous "Tropic Lightning" insignia. The traditions you have created throughout the last 25 years are eloquently, yet simply expressed in the two silver stars which crown the Combat infantryman's Badge of your Division. Yours is one of only two divisions in the United States Army entitled to display this highly prized evidence of combat in three wars on behalf of your country. The 25th Infantry Division has truly ridden to the sound of the guns from Pearl Harbor to Pleiku. From Guadalcanal to Pusan to Cu Chi the valor, the courage and the professionalism of the officers and men of the 25th are legend. Your presence in my command is a source of confidence for me. A mission assigned to the 25th Infantry Division is a mission accomplished. I congratulate you on your 25th anniversary, and extend every good wish for your future success—a success I know you will achieve.

Above the sounds of artillery, past man-made fortifications constructed to halt the enemy, there is a different type of sanctuary . . . where soldiers pause during the hour of need, at the fleeting moment of a quick reaction, through the spontaneity of heartbreak and joy. There is a place and a time to bow heads . . . in prayer . . .

By Major General Fred C. Weyand
Commanding General
25th Infantry Division

On the occasion of our 25th anniversary, we of the 25th Infantry "Tropic Lightning" Division find ourselves in a setting familiar to those who have served before us, fulfilling the challenge of defending freedom in its hour of utmost danger.

The heroic deeds of the men of the 25th in World War II and Korea are now recorded as legend. But that legend continues to grow as men of pride and courage and dedication and conviction pay the price for freedom on the battlefields of Vietnam today.

Men of the 25th have always displayed the highest standards of their profession, with skill and honor, through the jungle mud of Guadalcanal, over the snow-clad hills of Korea, in the rice paddies of Vietnam. The famed "lightning bolt" attack of the 25th Infantry Division, aimed at those who would deny freedom to those who seek it, has earned "Tropic Lightning" soldiers the reputation of being the Army's best.

Today, we celebrate "The 25th's 25th . . . in Combat" and the colorful history of a fighting division continues to expand with stories of heroism . . . of courage . . . of triumph . . .

The 25th's 25th . . .

During the 25-year history of the 25th Infantry Division, "Tropic Lightning" soldiers have spent 14 of those years in foreign territory. One year after the Division was organized, men of the "Tropic Lightning" boarded troop ships and headed for Guadalcanal, the first stop in the Division's island-hopping campaign of World War II. After the war, the Division was assigned the mission of occupying Japan, where they remained until the outbreak of the Korean War in 1950. After Korea, the "Tropic Lightning" returned to its home base at Schofield Barracks to tackle the problem of maintaining a ready defense for the Pacific area. The call to arms came 11 years later in 1965 when elements of the 25th Division were deployed to the Republic of Vietnam. The remainder of the Division arrived here this year.

IN COMBAT

Just one year old when it arrived in Guadalcanal to take its place alongside the older and more tradition-clad Army divisions, the "Tropic Lightning" was quick to build a reputation for lightning swift moves which ultimately took the Division to Luzon.

During the Philippine Liberation, the 25th Infantry Division set a record—for consecutive days in combat—165. Five years later, the Division returned to the battlefield, this time in Korea. Typical of the dedication and fighting spirit of the "Tropic Lightning" were the 800 days in combat, another record for the 25th Infantry Division, and the award of fourteen Congressional Medals of Honor to "Tropic Lightning" soldiers.

World War II

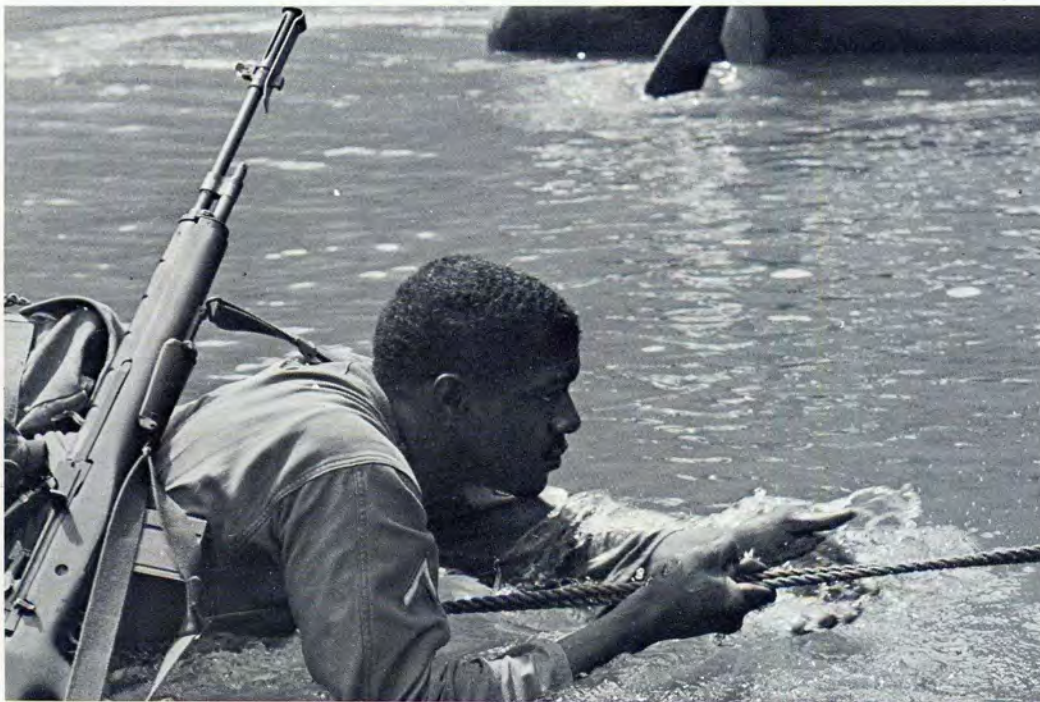

Korea

Back to Hawaii and to Schofield Barracks after an absence of 13 years . . . Now was the time for preparation and training, with time out now and then to enjoy the color and fantasies of the Islands. The 25th Infantry Division was tapped as the Army's immediate reaction force in the Pacific. With the build up of tension in the faraway Republic of Vietnam came a comparable build up of realistic training programs and facilities in the environs of the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii. The first of "Tropic Lightning" soldiers to enter combat in Vietnam were called "Shotgunners." Volunteers from the Division, these men were the first aerial door gunners on helicopters in Vietnam.

When the first troops of the 3rd Brigade, 25th Infantry "Tropic Lightning" Division, landed December 23, 1965, at the New Pleiku Airfield, they represented the first of a 4,000-man brigade on its way from Schofield Barracks, thanks to "Blue Light," the longest and largest airlift of cargo and personnel to a combat area in military history.

"Blue Light" saw a total of 225 missions flown and 9,290,000 pounds of cargo transported in C-133 "Cargomasters" and C-141 "Starlifters" to Pleiku headquarters in the central mountain region, 250 miles northeast of Saigon.

This was the first in a series of moves which eventually brought the entire 25th Infantry Division to Vietnam.

Elements of the "Tropic Lightning" Division immediately assumed a key position in the military operations in Vietnam, searching and clearing Viet Cong hamlets and villages, conducting night ambushes and patrols, and depriving the enemy of his vital supply and access routes. Tankers and artillerymen teamed with the foot soldier in his drive to push the enemy back and end his reign of terror over the villagers of Vietnam.

"The Civil War had its 'gun runners' and Prohibition had its 'rum runners.' Today, the war in Vietnam has its 'tunnel runners'."

"Tropic Lightning tunnel runners" are playing a key role in a war where the enemy finds his hiding place in elaborate underground complexes. They work in small teams, with a security guard around their base of operation. When a tunnel is found, two men armed with flashlights, .45 caliber pistols, smoke grenades and a field telephone crawl into the entrance to dig out the burrowing Viet Cong.

"Tropic Lightning" soldiers of the 25th Infantry Division brought to Vietnam more than guns and ammunition. They carried with them, by sea and air, tons of goods donated by the citizens of Hawaii to the villagers of Vietnam in an effort to extend the goodwill of the American people to an embattled nation. Operation "Helping Hand" has bridged a vital gap between the men of the "Tropic Lightning" and the Vietnamese people nearby. Unlike the enemy tactics of terror and harassment, the men of the 25th Infantry Division have responded with assistance to enable the Vietnamese to build up their homes, their villages and their country.

While "Tropic Lightning" soldiers pursue the enemy in the field, doctors and medics attack the problem of disease and sickness in hamlets and villages nearby. Soldiers with medicine first aid kits and sanitary items have become familiar faces among the Vietnamese villagers, who have discovered that there is more to the American effort in Vietnam than stopping the enemy aggressor.

In the chronicle of the 25th Infantry Division there is a rare breed of man whose dedication to duty and devotion to country have taken him beyond the bounds of ordinary men. "Tropic Lightning" soldiers have carried the colors of a valiant nation through the Balete Pass on Luzon, over the Han River in Korea, to the HoBo Woods of Vietnam. Brave men have died on the battlefields of the Pacific . . . in three wars. Brave men have carried on in their place. To the men of the "Tropic Lightning" duty with honor above and beyond the call is their contribution to a great nation.

The setting for the story of the 25th Infantry "Tropic Lightning" Division is the 55 million square-mile area of the vast Pacific Ocean, with all its various land masses.

Geographically portrayed, its path would resemble a monster triangle whose extreme points would be represented by the Hawaiian Islands, New Zealand and Vietnam.

Historically portrayed, it would encompass the sites of such important military achievements as the Gifu sector on Guadalcanal, the Zieta Trail on New Georgia, Balete Pass on Luzon, Korea's Heartbreak Ridge and a sweltering, dusty Viet Cong ridden camp called Cu Chi, Vietnam.

Dramatically portrayed, it would deal with purple and orange sunsets, coral sand beaches, jungle-locked blue lagoons, coconuts and copra, lustrous mother-of-pearl, shiny, coveted "cat's eyes," and musk-drenched vegetation.

Present are all the ingredients worthy of the best traditions of Tales of the South Pacific, but such a romantic picture would represent a grim betrayal of the Alumni. They know better. They were there.

They learned that there is little that is romantic in the infantryman's war in the Pacific, in the utter weariness, the physical and spiritual discomfort, the aching loneliness. They learned to know it for what it was—a day-to-day existence of units-of-fire, canned rations, combat patrols, booby traps and kill or be killed.

The 25th Division is unique among the nation's fighting divisions because it has never served within the continental limits of the United States. It calls Schofield Barracks in Hawaii its home base. As a unit its entire background is tied up with the maelstrom of Asia and the Far East, and its unceasing turbulence.

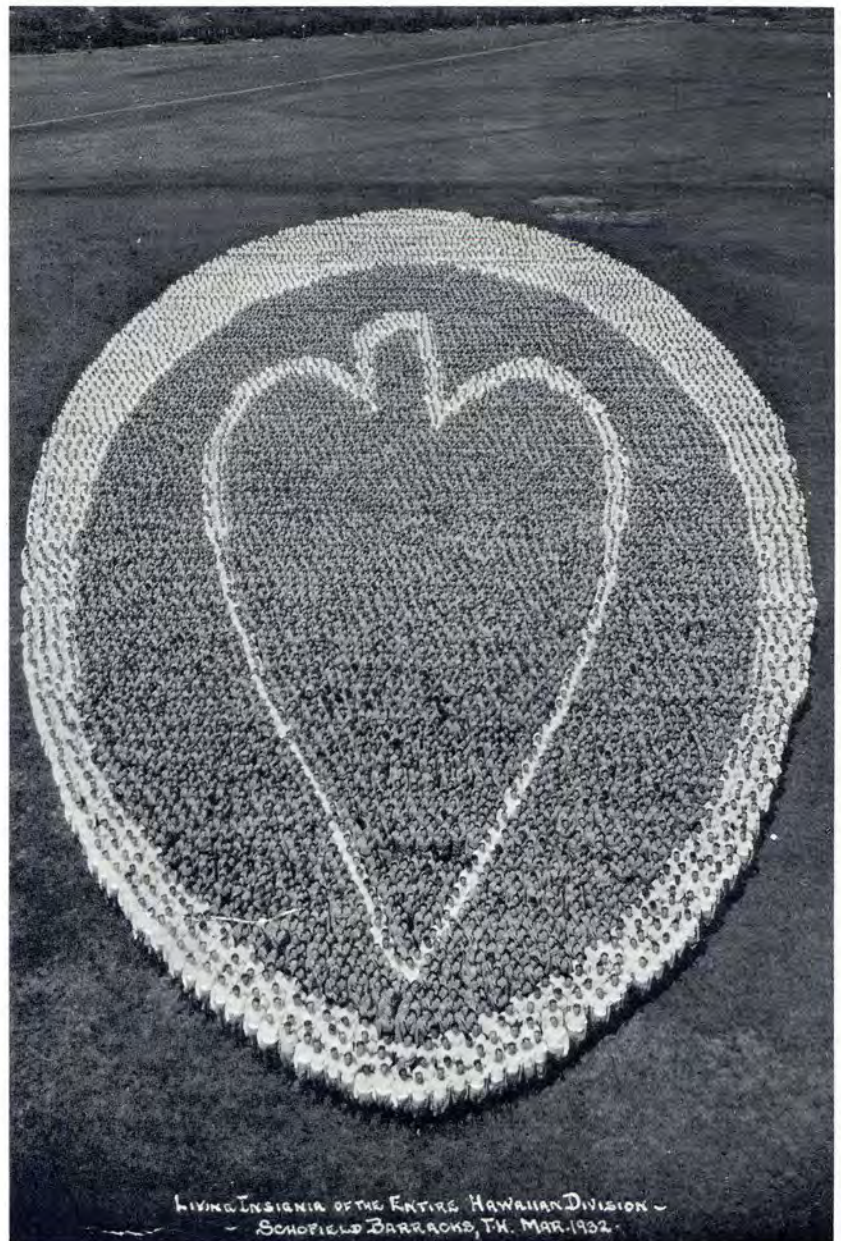

Its infantry units—components of the Regular Army long before the 25th was forged out of the old Hawaiian Division just before the start of World War II—served at various stations in China, in Siberia, in the Philippines, and even paid a visit to peacetime Japan.

Proud former commanders of the 25th make no idle boasts in the "my outfit can lick your outfit" vein. They are content to point to the record.

The "record" starts on an island named Oahu . . . when the newly born 25th, barely 10 weeks old, stepped into history on that infamous day, December 7, 1941, and exchanged rifle and machine gun fire with aircraft of the Japanese Imperial Navy and for almost a year following defended the Hawaiian Islands and prepared for the long campaigns ahead.

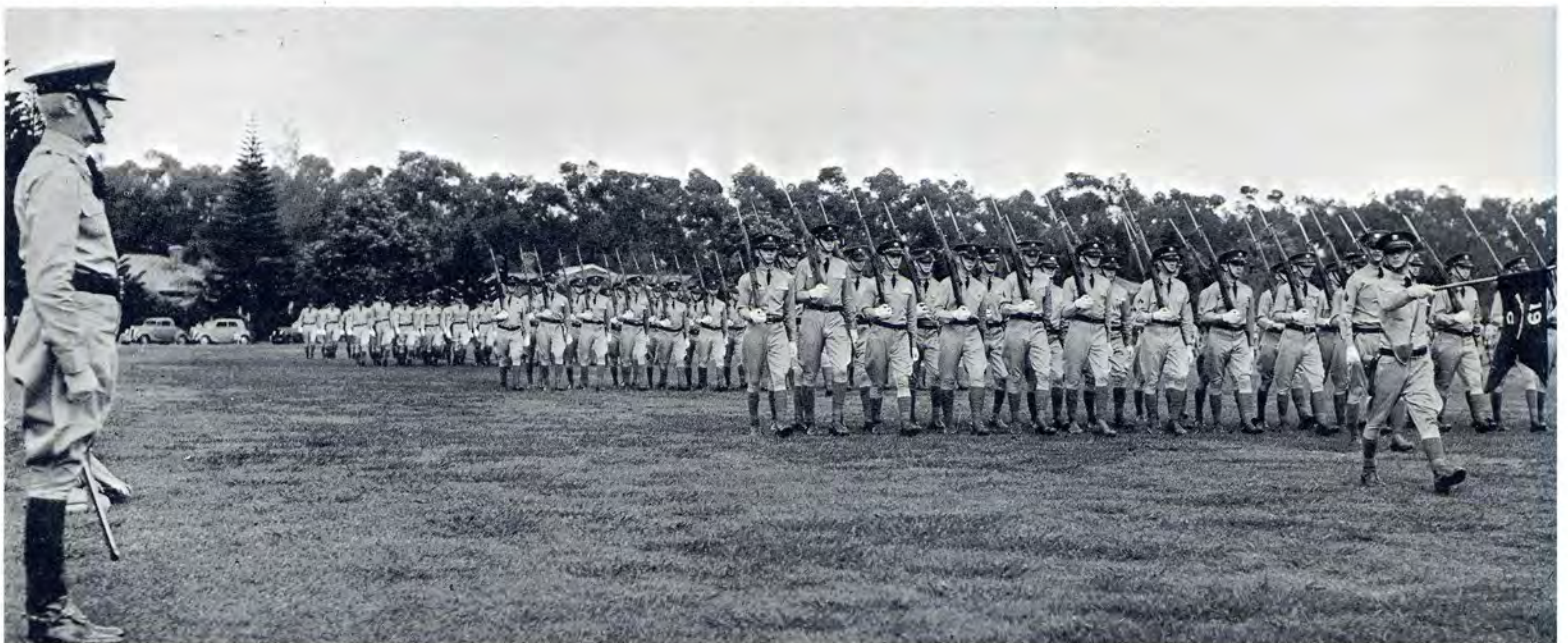

All that goes before is but a prelude to the main event for which all 25th Division soldiers are trained . . . COMBAT!

Hawaiian Division in camp on Oahu before 25th Infantry Division was formerly organized.

"AT THE FINAL STROKE OF TWELVE LAST NIGHT A FINE OLD SOLDIERMAN PASSED AWAY, BUT IN HIS PLACE STEPPED UP TWO LUSTY SONS TO CARRY ON."

With these words, beginning an editorial in the issue of October 1, 1941, The Honolulu Advertiser took note of the organization of new Infantry Divisions in the U.S. Army.

"The Hawaiian Division," the editorial continued, "is no more. The proud organization that was stationed at Schofield Barracks has been inactivated. In its place this morning are two new 'streamlined' divisions, the Twenty-fourth and the Twenty-fifth."

In those days, "streamlined" meant the "new" triangular division. As the Advertiser put it, "the passing of the Hawaiian Division marks the end of Square Divisions within the Army of the United States . . . Oahu was the last stronghold of the Old Army."

But in the days that followed, "streamlined" was destined to take on a new meaning in the Pacific—it came to mean the swift move, the hard punch, which earned the nickname "Tropic Lightning" for the new 25th Infantry Division.

Organized after World War I, and inactivated just five months before its 21st anniversary, the old Hawaiian Division, in the words of the Advertiser, "fell just short of reaching maturity." By contrast, the new 25th Division grew up fast.

Less than ten weeks after it was organized, the Division was engaged in combat.

Attack on Pearl Harbor

On December 7, 1941, a slightly overcast sky was suddenly broken by the appearance of 353 planes of the Japanese Navy.

The peaceful Sunday morning turned into one of the bloodiest Sundays in history. Within two hours the United States military might of the Pacific had been temporarily crippled.

Schofield Barracks was in the thick of things when Japanese planes screamed through Kolekole Pass to launch the attack on Hawaii. The first bullets to be fired on that "Day of Infamy" struck what was until recently the headquarters building of the 25th Division's 3rd Squadron, 4th Cavalry.

The Japanese planes, swooping to strafe the Quads, met with 25th Division machine gun and other small arms fire.

Those same planes tore into adjoining Wheeler Field (now Wheeler Air Force Base) and smashed the base's hangars into rubble. Meanwhile, other fighter-bombers from the Japanese fleet, anchored about 100 miles from Oahu, shrieked through Pearl Harbor, killing 2,403 unsuspecting people, including 1,177 on the battleship USS ARIZONA, which sank within nine minutes after being hit by enemy bombs.

When the smoke cleared, 18 ships, of which eight were battleships, and 398 planes had been destroyed. The ARIZONA and USS UTAH still lie just feet below the surface of Pearl Harbor.

Within hours after the initial assault the newly born "Lightningaires" were in beach positions, ready to repel any landing force. Hours before the formal declaration of war, the Division had engaged the enemy with deadly fire.

Today at Schofield Barracks, a 25-foot high cross—visible across the Waianae plains, as far as the Koolau Mountains—stands as a reminder of the men who died during the attack.

A memorial commemorating the American dead now stands over the grave of the ARIZONA.

In the months that followed, the Division was busy building up defenses around Honolulu and in the Ewa Plains. In those first days of the war there was no time off. Defensive positions were manned round-the-clock, and training for jungle warfare was paramount. No one knew where the Division was going, but Hawaiian climate and terrain offered an excellent opportunity to train in jungle operations. The rigorous training was not wasted.

Alerted for movement, the Division was relieved of its defensive mission on November 1, 1942. As the 25th Division readied for departure, Major General J. Lawton Collins, commanding general, received a message from Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, Commander-in-Chief, Pacific Fleet, who was in charge of all Pacific operations:

"CINCPAC congratulates the 25th Division which in addition to performing defense duties on Oahu has made good use of its time and is now outstandingly fit and ready for offensive combat . . . We have high expectations of successful actions by you against the enemy."

I don't know anything about it. I only know what we see from our worm's-eye view, and our segment of the picture consists only of tired and dirty soldiers who are alive and don't want to die; of long darkened convoys in the middle of the night, of shocked, silent men wandering back down the hill from battle; of chow lines and atabrine tablets and foxholes and burning tanks; of jeeps and smelly bedding rolls and C rations and blown bridges and hospital tents and shirt collars greasy-black from months of wearing; and of laughter too, and anger and wine and lovely flowers and constant cussing. All these it is composed of; and of graves and graves and graves.

Thirteen months after the 25th Infantry Division was organized, "Tropic Lightning" soldiers were on the move to Guadalcanal and were immediately committed to combat. After mopping up the last of the enemy there, the Division began an island hopping series of lightning-swift campaigns that carried it from New Georgia to Arundel, Kolombangara and Vella Lavella Islands and finally to the Philippines.

Unopposed landing on Luzon.

Toward the end of November the first of three convoys left Honolulu for Guadalcanal. The transports were commercially loaded, with the understanding that they would stop off en route to be reloaded for combat. The reloading never took place. Instead, the Division unloaded itself into landing boats off Guadalcanal and landed on the open beaches west of the Tenaru River. The initial Marine invasion of the island had forced the Japanese back into the hills. Little was known of their strength, but early fighting had shown that resistance would probably continue until every single enemy soldier had been annihilated.

In the absence of maps, air reconnaissance was used to scout the terrain. The forking Matanikau River divided the rough and broken terrain into three main compartments. The Division's objective: break through the enemy's line; cut the compartments; envelop his southern flank; and reduce his strength on Mount Austen, from where he could cover all three areas. With only one road into the area, and only a few of Mount Austen's foothills in American hands, the Division had a formidable task.

Marching fourteen miles through the jungle, the Division set up its lines as planned. Then the sky fell for the enemy as the Division barrelled through his lines and swept up the slopes of Mount Austen. Within ten days the enemy was bottled up in three main pockets. As the 27th Infantry battled in the open and the 35th Infantry pushed through the jungles of Mount Austen, Division Artillery pounded the mountain crest from its position in the foothills. The 161st Infantry (then a unit of the Division) made a junction with other Army forces a few miles east of Cape Esperance only twenty days later. The Japanese occupation of Guadalcanal was over. It was the unprecedented speed with which the Division waged and completed this campaign that earned it the designation, "Tropic Lightning."

Garrisoned in Guadalcanal for five months following the fighting, the Division faced new challenges. The Japanese were gone, but the Division was still at war—with a food shortage, mosquitoes, and tropical disease. Evening activities were always the same with monotonous regularity: Japanese air-aids. One day in mid-June Division troops watched 100 Japanese planes fall from the sky, with only six American losses.

Rumors circulated that the Division was going for a rest, or going home, but the first of July, 1943, saw the Division troops leave for combat in New Georgia.

The Division's objective on jungle-crowded New Georgia was the capture of Munda Airfield. Units of the Division were given a line of departure for the attack, but it took nine days of fighting through enemy-infested jungles to reach the line. Then came the tough part. In some of the bloodiest fighting of the war, Division units pushed through to the beach, securing the high ground and out-flanking the airfield, making its capture possible. Striking hard at several islands in the group simultaneously, elements of the Division cleared Arundel Island, Kolombangara Island, and participated in the dazzling capture of Vella Lavella.

Until this moment in the war, American forces had moved forward in the Pacific, taking one island after another. The attack on Vella Lavella represented a new strategy—one enemy-held island was by-passed to take another. The Japanese had planned to build an air base on Vella Lavella.

Jungle living and jungle combat had greatly reduced the Division's strength, and following the New Georgia campaign the Division was ordered first to New Zealand and then to New Caledonia for rest, replacement and intensive training.

During this period the Division underwent training for open combat, and rumors spread that combat in Europe was next in line.

But "Tropic Lightning" had a well-established reputation for its island fighting in the Pacific—and it was again in the Pacific that the Imperial Japanese Army was to feel the Lightning Bolt.

During the dark early days of the war, at the tragic departure from Bataan, General Douglas A. MacArthur made a private vow which was to become an angry nation's battle cry: "I shall return."

At the end of 1944, General MacArthur was ready to make good his promise. The Division was alerted: "Tropic Lightning" was needed to help in the liberation of the Philippines.

After the landing on Luzon, the Division's first mission was to advance on Binalonan and secure the town. With its usual speed, the Division moved in. Despite heavy enemy counterattacks from the rear with hidden armor and dug-in snipers, the Division's advance elements in Binalonan held.

Moving next against San Manuel and Asingan, the Division met some of its toughest resistance of the war. To meet the advancing Lightningaires the enemy threw his 2nd Armored Division into the battle. The weight of the armor could not halt the Division's drive. Engaging Japanese with only infantry assault weapons, Division units captured and held both towns, with enemy losses at nearly 200 tanks and more than 2,000 dead.

As other Allied forces swept down toward Manila, the Division was ordered to begin operations in the Caraballo Mountains with the key Balete Pass as its objective. The news came that war was over in Europe. With increased determination to close out hostilities in the Pacific, the Division moved forward relentlessly, and by mid-May had captured the strategic Pass; just days later, with the conquest of Santa Fe, the Division opened the gateway to the Cagayan Valley.

During the Philippine liberation the Division set a record for days in combat—165. Then after a brief training stint in the Tarlac area, the Division was ordered to Japan.

"Wolfhound" stands representative of the veteran 25th Infantry Division in the Tokyo Area.

As the U.S. and her Allies celebrated victory in global war, the Division buckled down to the grim task of occupying war-scarred Japan. "Tropic Lightning" left the Philippines with six unit citations to its credit, six Medals of Honor for its members and a wartime record of 165 consecutive days of combat. Only four years old when Organization Day was celebrated in Japan for the first time, the 25th Infantry Division could stand with pride alongside any of the Army's older, tradition-laden divisions.

In the years of the occupation the Division showed the world that it was composed of men, not just fighting machines. Charged with the responsibility of processing the war's refugees and homeless, the 27th Infantry "Wolfhounds" founded an orphanage at Osaka for the war's forgotten children.

Men clear snow at Hagoya, Japan, Southern Honshu.

"I feel so sorry for other children who have only one father. I have so many. . . ."

This letter was written in Braille by a sightless youngster named Masami at Osaka Orphanage, the Holy Family Home in Japan, which the men of the 27th Infantry "Wolfhounds" and the 8th Artillery "Automatic Eighth" have unselfishly supported for the last 17 years.

It began in November 1949, when the 25th Division was stationed at Camp Sakai, on the outskirts of Osaka, Japan. As was the custom, each occupation unit was to sponsor a Christmas party for the children of a Japanese orphanage. The "Wolfhounds" were asked to entertain the children of the Holy Family in Osaka.

Upon seeing how the youngsters in the orphanage were forced to live, one company of "Wolfhounds," 143 strong, donated $143 on the payday following the party. On the next payday, every company in the Regiment made a contribution to the orphanage. The "Osaka Home" tradition was born.

The many faces of Osaka.

The Osaka Orphanage is now recognized as the finest in the Orient, and although it is expensive to maintain, the officers and men of the 27th Infantry and the 8th Artillery have always handled the task. Many honors have come to the men for their efforts. Hollywood has filmed the story, the Legislature of Hawaii has honored them several times, the Freedoms Foundation has presented them with the George Washington Honor Medal, even the Emperor of Japan has commended them. But their greatest reward has been the love of the hundreds of children they have helped through the years.

" I have so many "

The Division was still garrisoned in Japan on June 25, 1950, when, without provocation or warning, troops of North Korea swarmed across the 38th Parallel, attacking the Republic of Korea. The war had been over less than five years. Now the peace was over.

Across the Sea of Japan on the tiny peninsula of Korea, the Red invasion began. In Osaka and on the island of Kyushu, "Tropic Lightning" soldiers soon learned that there was war in Korea. Within ten days of the Red onslaught and with little preparation for a major operation, the 25th Division was to be thrown into this vital breach.

KOREA

Colonel Dolvin was parked in a radio jeep by the side of the road, just outside the little town of Suwon, Korea. Seoul was another 30 miles or so to the North.

Seoul was where the 25th Division wanted to go. The "Tropic Lightning" had already taken the capital city of Korea once, and it was the last outfit to pull out of Seoul when the Chinese Communists smashed their way down the peninsula in December of 1950.

Now it was early February, 1951, and the 25th Division was battling back. The 35th Cacti Regiment had thrown the first punch, when it had captured the quaint town of Suwon, a place that looked like it had been copied from an oriental scroll painting.

The Division was probing its way North of Suwon, jabbing at the Communist forces with foot and tank patrols.

Colonel Dolvin was running a five-tank operation from his seat in the radio jeep that bitter cold morning in February. I drove up in my jeep that had white letters spelling "PRESS" written across it.

The last "S" in "PRESS" was a little smeared, because I had been caught in the act of painting it by the M.P.'s from Eighth Army, who had owned the jeep originally.

I had found it parked in one of their motor pools during the big retreat and borrowed it for the duration. Unfortunately, the original owners came to claim it before I had completely disguised it, but after some fast talking on my part they had decided that if I would drive it South I could keep it.

"Good morning, Colonel," I said to Dolvin. "What are you doing?"

"I'm running five tanks around on the hills out there to see how many Chinese there are between here and Seoul," he said. "So far we've found lots."

I asked him where the tanks were, and he pointed out their locations on the map. "One here, one here, one there, one just to our rear—and one way up on that hill," he said, pointing to a spot only eight miles or so from Seoul.

"Why that tank could hit Seoul from there, couldn't it?" I said.

"I wonder if you could have him fire a few rounds into Seoul for me," I asked the Colonel. "What for?" Dolvin wanted to know.

I explained that at this particular point of the Korean War the people back home in the United States were discouraged. The Chinese had entered the War in massive numbers and knocked us clear back to south of Seoul—just when it appeared the War had been won.

The shelling of Seoul, I explained, would dramatize the fact that we were fighting back.

"Okay," Dolvin said, "I'll call that tank on the radio and we'll fire a couple in there."

He took the mike, and called for "Lead Pipe One," the lead tank.

"This is Lead Pipe Six," Dolvin said. "Do you see that big town in front of you?"

A voice crackled out of the jeep radio. "You mean Yong-dong-Po?"

"No, no," said Dolvin. "I mean that REALLY big town."

"I don't read you," said the voice.

"I spell," said Dolvin. "Sugar, Easy, Oboe, Uncle, Love."

"Oh," said the voice. "You mean SEOUL."

"That's right," said Dolvin. "Could you fire a couple of rounds in there for me?"

"Roger, but I can't hit anything in there," the voice said.

"It's a big place," Dolvin said. "You can't miss it."

And he didn't. I went back to the Division CP and sent off a story to the Associated Press—my employer in those days—that 25th Division troops had shelled Seoul.

The New York Daily News carried only two words on its front page the next day: SEOUL SHELLED. Other newspapers across the country gave the story the same kind of splash.

I had a scoop, and a month later I joined the men of the Division in a little rubber boat as we crossed the Han River and captured Seoul for the second—and last—time.

It was just another example of "Tropic Lightning" service.

Now the 25th is celebrating its 25th anniversary, appropriately enough in combat again.

This is a fighting Division. It is also a Division with a heart. It is Hawaii's own Division, and the old place isn't the same without the men of the 25th.

But fighting is the name of the game when you're in the Army, and the 25th is a fighting outfit.

And now the 25th is back in combat again.—Jim Becker, The Honolulu Star-Bulletin

The Korean half-moon dipped behind a cloud—the night was quiet and seemingly peaceful.

Suddenly the rice paddies, which had been so calm, came to life. Bullets whizzed and careened across the fields and into the thatched roofs of a little village ahead, igniting the dried straw and creating an eerie light that cast its reflection over the surrounding plains.

Tall, lanky figures clad in combat attire leaped from the paddies and moved swiftly forward, smashing through the Red defenders to capture the town. The next morning dawned on the smoking, blackened ruins of Yechon, Korea—scene of the first offensive action by American troops in the Korean conflict.

This was the prelude to a bitter struggle—a struggle against an enemy who used as his manual the devil's own textbook. Many dark days were ahead—days that seemed like years—days spent in lice-infested fields, sweating . . . nights spent in foxholes, freezing . . . waiting for another assault by this ruthless, savage, barbarous enemy who fought with a fanaticism that Americans had never encountered before.

On July 5, 1950, the directive came—the Division was ordered into combat. Two days later elements of the Division began arriving in Korea.

The Red columns were advancing steadily, meeting little resistance from the outnumbered, overwhelmed Republic of Korea troops. At this point the entire northern part of South Korea was in Communist hands. Moving southward, the North Korean troops hoped to cut off and capture the vital port of Pusan. If they could accomplish that, the battle for Korea would be as good as over—for it was through Pusan that all United Nations troops and materiel were being shipped. Cut off United Nations forces would be exposed to disaster.

The 25th Division was assigned to the Sangju sector to hold off the Communist advance. As the Division held its ground, word came that another large Red force was moving on Pusan from the west. The Division was ordered to move to the Chinju-Masan area, 150 miles from its position, to meet the oncoming force.

The Reds, continuing their drive through the latter part of July, took Taejon and advanced on Yongdong, which tottered. The 27th Infantry Regiment, commanded by young Lieutenant Colonel John H. "Mike" Michaelis, 38, raced from Andong to meet the Communist threat.

On the morning of July 24, 1950, two North Korean divisions hit the regiment in force. It developed into the first full-scale engagement by a unit of the 25th Infantry Division in the war to date.

If the Reds managed to break through, it would drive a wedge between the 25th Division and the 1st Cavalry line. The "Wolfhounds" held their ground. Colonel Michaelis reported that the "Wolfhounds" were not defeated, but exhausted.

General Kean dispatched the following message to "Mike" Michaelis:

"Entire Division takes great pride in gallant and successful stand by you and your fighting men. My warmest regards. Kean."

Leaving one unit behind to create a diversion, the entire Division moved overnight to its new position. The move stunned the Communist aggressors.

The Reds at Sangju, who were fighting an entire Division only one day earlier, refused to move forward, fearing a trap. Surprised Red commanders near Masan, expecting to move in on Pusan unopposed, were suddenly confronted with one of America's fightingest Divisions. Military experts agree that this swift action and the follow-up move into Masan were the keys to saving Korea from total Red domination.

A few days later the Division massed for an assault on the high ground overlooking Chinju. On August 7 Task Force Kean, named for the Division's Commanding General, Major General William B. Kean, attacked. It was the first offensive action by U.S. troops in Korea and despite heavy resistance from enemy men and armor, the operation was successful. It had the effect of completely halting the Red offensive. The following month UN forces landed at Inchon and drove forward to Kunsan, with "Tropic Lightning" pushing forward from the south, trapping nearly 50,000 North Koreans.

Not long afterward United Nations forces crossed the 38th Parallel and drove deep into North Korea. The Communists, who had expected immediate victory in Korea, now faced total defeat. Rather than give up altogether, they called on Communist China for aid, and late in the year the Chinese poured across the Yalu River. Allied supply lines were over-extended and United Nations forces had to fall back and regroup, to prevent the Chinese from cutting them off entirely.

One year earlier the Division had crossed the Han River driving the North Koreans forward; they had crossed it again, withdrawing from the heavy Chinese push. They resolved that this was to be the last crossing. As the Division pushed across the river, the Chinese fought as though they were on the offensive. They had forgotten that they had the relentless drive of "The Tropic Lightning" to reckon with. Steadily, the Division pushed on.

During the Spring of 1951, in Operations "Ripper," "Dauntless," "Detonate" and "Piledriver," the Division tore through the Communist defenses, driving the enemy back toward the 38th Parallel.

For two more years the Division fought on. As the line positions began to stabilize, it was the Division's mission to maintain contact with the enemy, detect and destroy all forward movements. In May of 1953, the Division was ordered to guard Seoul. For more than a year there had been only limited fighting and the Chinese decided it was time to "surprise" the U.S. forces again. On May 28, the enemy began an all-out push on Seoul.

The Division held its ground and the assault was repulsed. The brunt of the assault was absorbed by the 14th Infantry in outposts "Elko," "Vegas," "Carson," "Berlin," and "East Berlin."

Successfully defending Seoul from continued enemy attack during the months May to July 1953 earned the Division its second ROK Presidential Citation. The first came early in the Korean fighting for the incredible overnight move from the Sangju sector to the Masan-Chinju area 150 miles away. Important dates and battles

25th Infantry Division . . . KOREA

July 10, 1950

Division entered the Korean conflict.

August 1, 1950

Participated in Task Force Kean, the first UN offensive action of the Korean fighting, ending the threat to the vital Pusan area. Division won Korean Presidential Unit Citation for this action, August 1-11, 1950.

September 20, 1950

Breakout from the Pusan Perimeter.

November 3, 1950

Chinese Communist Forces intervention.

March 7, 1951

Operation RIPPER: Division attacks across Han River in assault boats, inflicting heavy casualties on Chinese and forcing the enemy out of Seoul. Corps Commander commends Division for this operation.

April 3, 1951

Operation RUGGED: Division seized positions along Line Kansas by April 5, advancing to occupy terrain overlooking the Han Tan River.

April 11, 1951

Operation DAUNTLESS: Drove to the southern edge of the Chorwon Valley—at that time the northernmost advance of the Eighth Army.

May 20, 1951

Operation DETONATE: Division advanced 40 miles, crossing the 38th Parallel again to drive the Reds into the Kumhwa area.

May 30, 1951

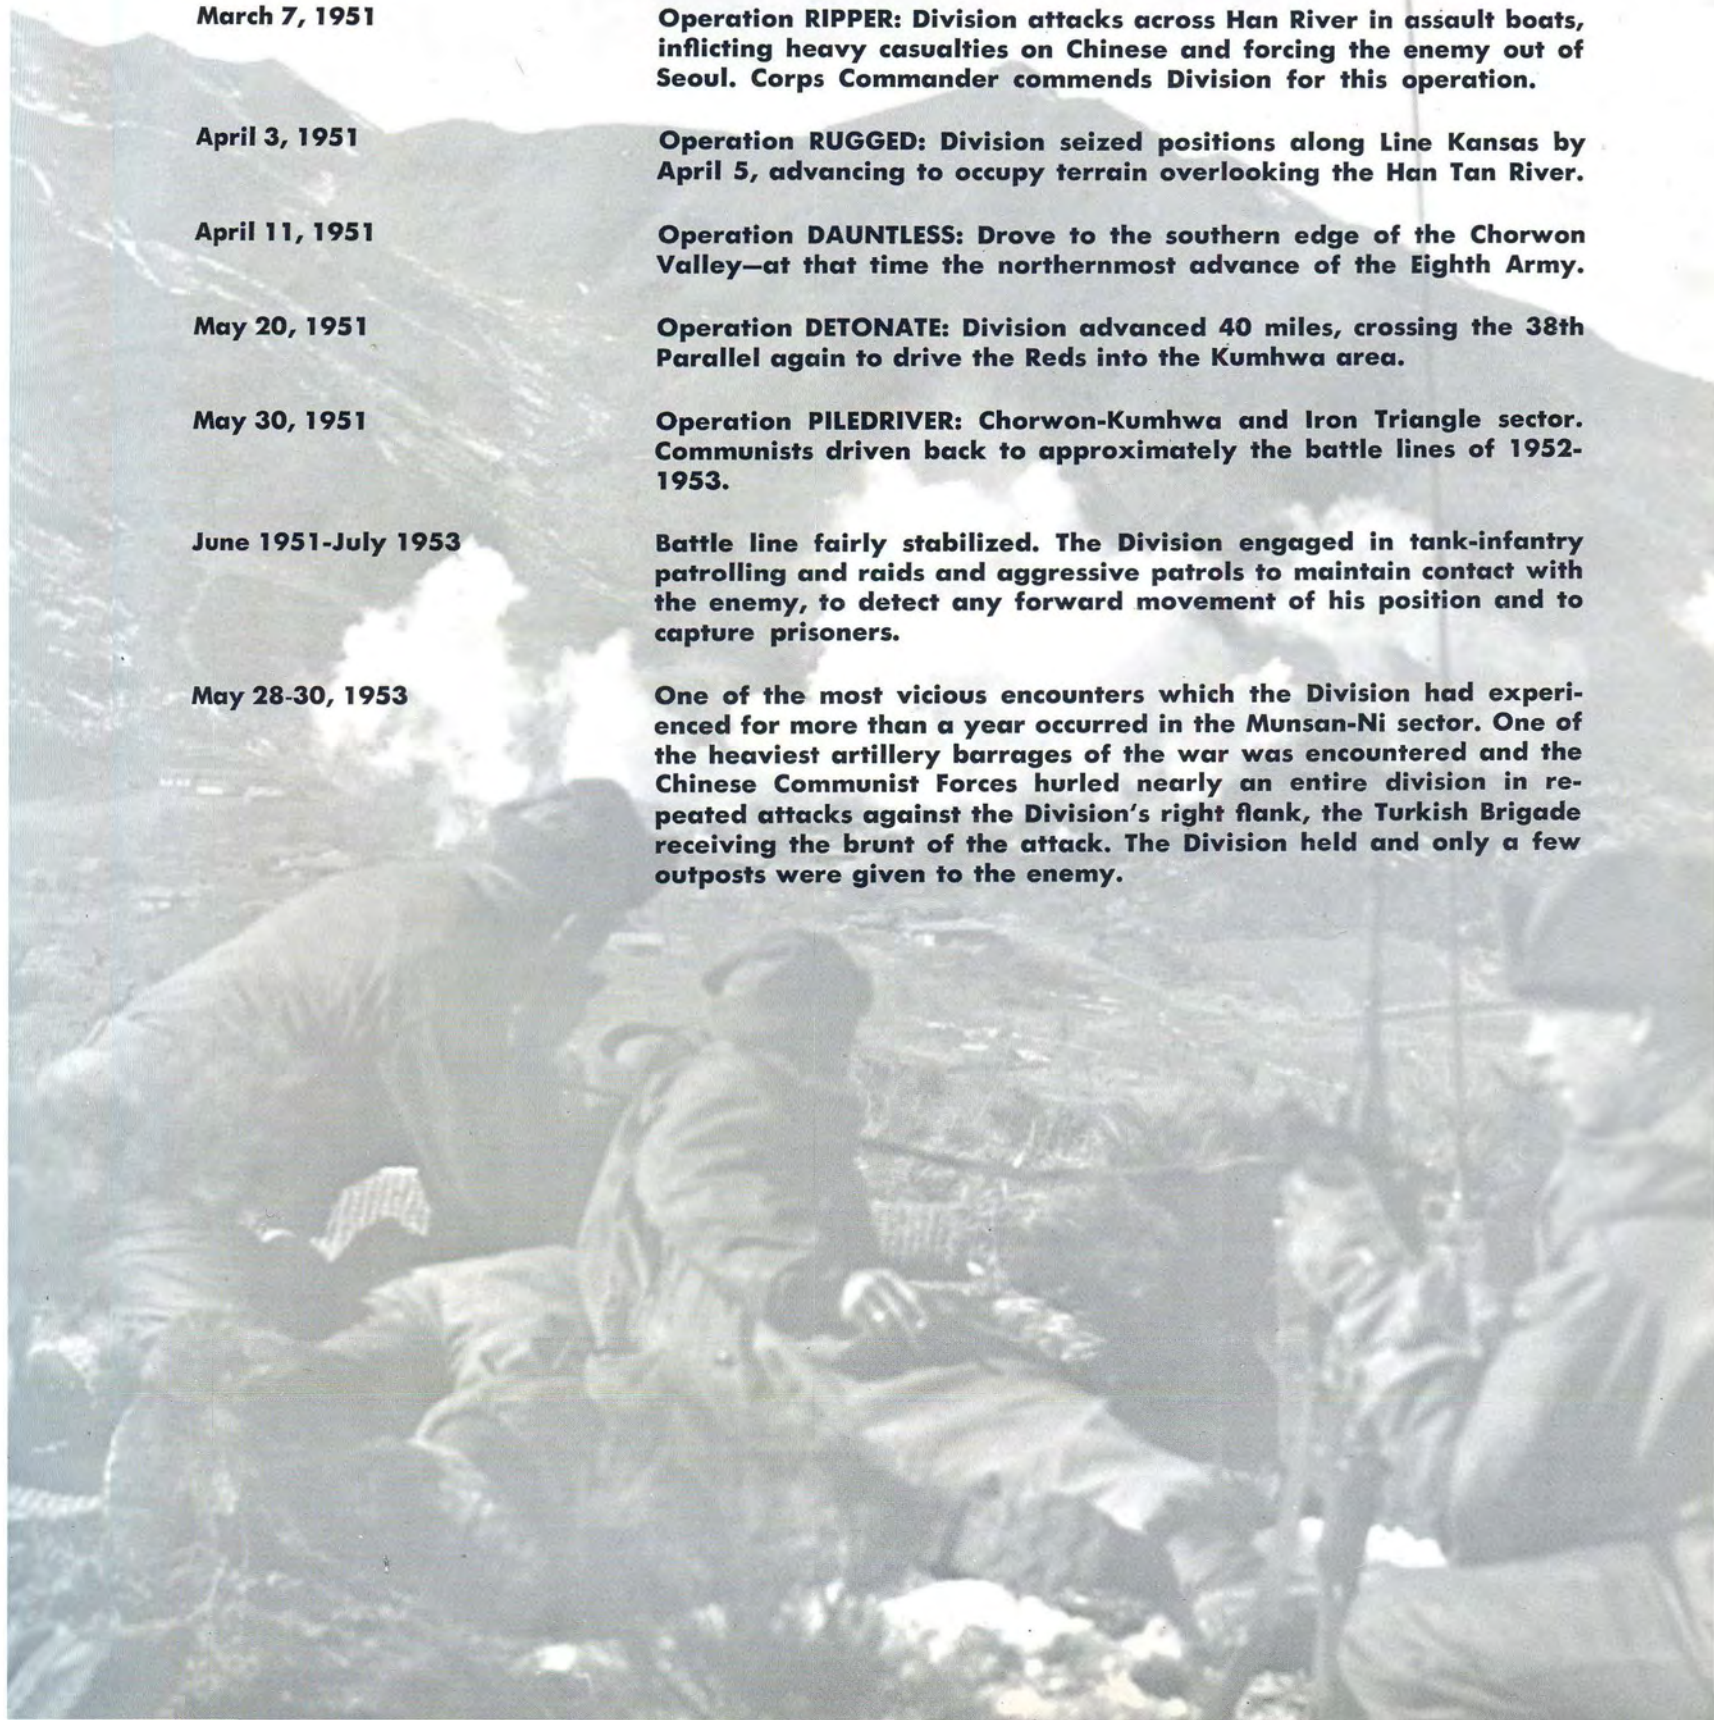

Operation PILEDRIVER: Chorwon-Kumhwa and Iron Triangle sector. Communists driven back to approximately the battle lines of 1952-1953.

June 1951-July 1953

Battle line fairly stabilized. The Division engaged in tank-infantry patrolling and raids and aggressive patrols to maintain contact with the enemy, to detect any forward movement of his position and to capture prisoners.

May 28-30, 1953

One of the most vicious encounters which the Division had experienced for more than a year occurred in the Munsan-Ni sector. One of the heaviest artillery barrages of the war was encountered and the Chinese Communist Forces hurled nearly an entire division in repeated attacks against the Division's right flank, the Turkish Brigade receiving the brunt of the attack. The Division held and only a few outposts were given to the enemy.

Aloha 25th

It was not primarily for rest and relaxation that the Division returned to Schofield Barracks.

As the troopships sailed into Honolulu Harbor, cheers met the "Lightningaires" from the shore. On the docks, Hawaiian wahines were swaying to the hula and singing aloha. As the Division quickly settled into the Schofield Quads, they went to work building an immediate reaction force for the United States Army in the Pacific. If nothing else, Korea had shown the Division one thing: They must always be ready to strike anywhere, anytime. In a tension-ridden world they couldn't afford to relax their defenses.

The years following the return from Korea were years of tough, steady training and reorganization for modern combat.

Schofield Barracks: Synonymous with Hawaii, "Pearl of the Pacific," "Paradise of the Pacific," the Sandwich Islands, the Aloha State, the 50th State.

Steeped in the mountains of Oahu, Schofield Barracks, third largest city in Hawaii, is surrounded by majestic peaks, sloping green hills and deep crevices combining to provide an atmosphere of beauty and tranquility.

Combined cultures of five major ethnic groups—Caucasian, Japanese, Hawaiian, Filipino and Chinese—and fiercely proud of its native history, Hawaii, through Schofield Barracks, offers to the military the paradoxes of carefree surfers and tropic valleys next to six-lane highways and shopping centers of gleaming chrome and neon.

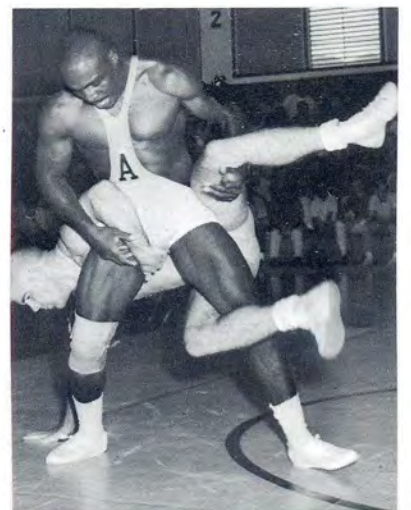

From the cheerful "Aloha" displayed upon disembarking at the harbor to the same nostalgic word etched in the Aloha Tower, eternal summer sun, beaches and post activities swallow soldiers into the quietly busy Schofield milieu.

It's time to relax and think. . . .

Members of the 25th Infantry Division were avid participants in a widespread sports program before their deployment to Vietnam, thanks to extensive facilities, including an Olympic-standard swimming pool, two 18-hole golf courses, an arena seating 10,000 people, two bowling alleys, a gymnasium, football stadium, baseball and softball diamonds, skating rink and tennis, handball and squash courts. This city of quadrangles, loops and malls was a bustling network of schools, clubs, laundries, banks, hospitals, clinics, gas stations and grocery stores.

Along Schofield's trim macadam streets there appeared picnic grounds, monuments, beer gardens, three theaters, a nursery, barber shops, a service club, commissary, fire department and post office.

But Division members did not live by bread alone. Seven chapels with a combined seating capacity of 1,000 and 17 chaplains of all faiths ministered to the spiritual needs of post personnel.

Schofield had learned to take care of itself and was considered a model community where all 25th Infantry Division residents enjoyed life and lived modest, healthy, orderly and contented lives.

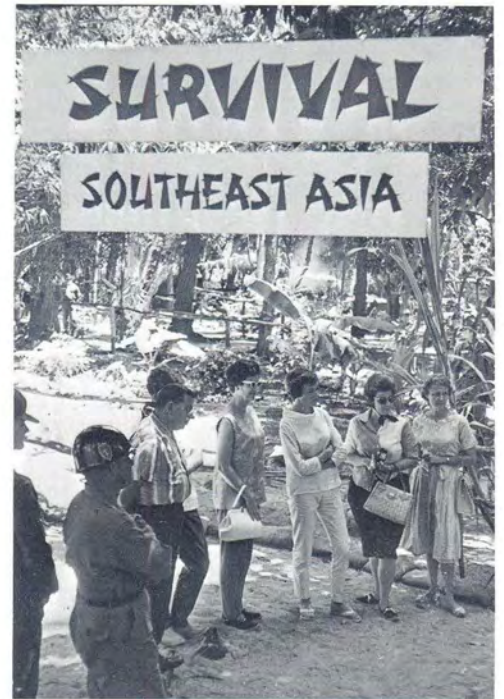

As the irrepressible Maria in "The Sound of Music," Julie Andrews added to her growing list of outstanding performances on both stage and screen. She dazzled Broadway and later London, as Eliza Doolittle in the unforgettable "My Fair Lady" and went on to new triumphs as stately Guinevere in "Camelot," again on Broadway. Her motion picture debut in "Mary Poppins" charmed audiences and she garnered rave reviews for her next film role in "The Americanization of Emily."

The co-star of James Michener's "Hawaii" got her first taste of "Mongoose Stew" when she invaded the tranquil foothills of the Koolau Mountains and visited 25th Infantry Division's jungle training facilities and the men of the "Tropic Lightning" Division.

The British actress, well known for her joyous singing about nature's beauty, was presented a citation by Major General Fred C. Weyand, commanding general, 25th Division, making her the first woman to be proclaimed an honorary member of the famed "Tropic Lightning" Division.

The focal point of the "Tropic Lightning" soldier's existence at Schofield Barracks from the Korean War to the current commitment in Vietnam was training—intensive, well-planned and so closely patterned after the "real thing" that officers and men of the 25th Infantry Division now in Vietnam frequently compare the facsimiles of problems yesterday with military operations in hamlets and villages around Cu Chi and Pleiku today.

The 25th Infantry Division left the marks of rugged training on the jagged lava beds, impassable training areas, bumpy, twisting roads of Hawaii, and snow-covered mountains of the Big Island during mobility exercises, "Blue Blazer I and II," "Red Rover," "Compass Road," "Saddle Road," "Kona Wind," "Long Sabre I, II and III" and "Lava Ridge II and III;" field training exercises, "High Top I and IV," "Dusty Trail" and "Boot Ripper," and combined arms exercises, "Mountain Top III" and "High Top III."

To obtain a different climate and terrain, plus larger firing areas, in years past the Division's three brigades and supporting units frequently traveled to the Pohakuloa Training Area on the Big Island, which offers shoe and track-breaking terrain, cold weather and dusty, rock-strewn mountain slopes.

The base camp was located in the lava bed saddle between Mauna Loa and Mauna Kea volcanos, 30 miles from Hilo. The training area was used by units taking annual training tests for combined arms exercises and for combined exercises with "sister services."

The open land on the Big Island provided training areas not found on Oahu.

To many the Big Island was a state of mind—an idyllic spot where church bells chime at sunset and the spirit of hoomanawanui, or, "relax, take it easy" were the order of the day.

But to the men of the 25th Infantry Division, Big Island means more than exotic flowers and tours through orchid nurseries. It recalls eating and shaving dust . . . the cold, rain, late hours and early rising . . . the hard work and the outdoor plumbing.

For more than 2,500 Division troops, Exercise "Thunderbolt," an eight-day field training exercise, meant realism. From the time the troops left Schofield Barracks, headed for the Kahuku Training Areas in the Koolau Mountains, Hawaii, until they returned, every attempt was made to transform these training areas into the hypothetical Southeast Asian nation of Hostland.

The largest of the villages and the setting of unexpected "violence" was Toka, set in the foothills of the Koolaus.

Civic action was only one part of Exercise "Thunderbolt." While Division troops were finding out the "do's" and "don't's" of Hostland, "casualties" of C Company, 2nd Battalion, 35th Infantry were air evacuated from Dillingham Air Base, 15 miles west of the village. The "casualties" were suffered when the reinforced company seized the air field. Division medics, using modeling clay and petroleum jelly, did a make-up job worthy of a Hollywood horror film.

Thunderbolt

West Wind

Approximately 4,000 men landed on the beaches of Molokai April 15, 1964, D-Day for Exercise "West Wind," to begin the combat phase of what has been described as "the most ambitious amphibious training maneuver for the 25th Infantry Division in years."

Major General Andrew J. Boyle, commanding general, 25th Infantry Division, led the first wave of troops ashore for the anti-guerrilla and counterinsurgency operations.

On March 26, Molokai Airport received the first arrivals of the 2,000-man aggressor force, commanded by Colonel James L. Erickson, as MATS Globemasters started landing.

Tent cities blossomed and huts to house the population of the hypothetical villagers of Bahka were soon constructed.

The stage was set to receive the 4,000-man amphibious force which landed on Papohaku Beach. Soon after the initial assault a counterinsurgency operation including jungle and guerrilla warfare was underway, with every possible concept of modern warfare coming into play.

There was training in water-proofing vehicles and other equipment, training in ascending and descending cargo nets from transports to landing craft, and training in driving vehicles in surf. The training paid off.

A touch of Southeast Asia was brought to the Koolau Mountains of Oahu in March 1965 when more than 6,000 "Tropic Lightning" soldiers moved to the hypothetical country of "Kurlandia" during Exercise "Black Night"—a 15-day counterinsurgency training operation.

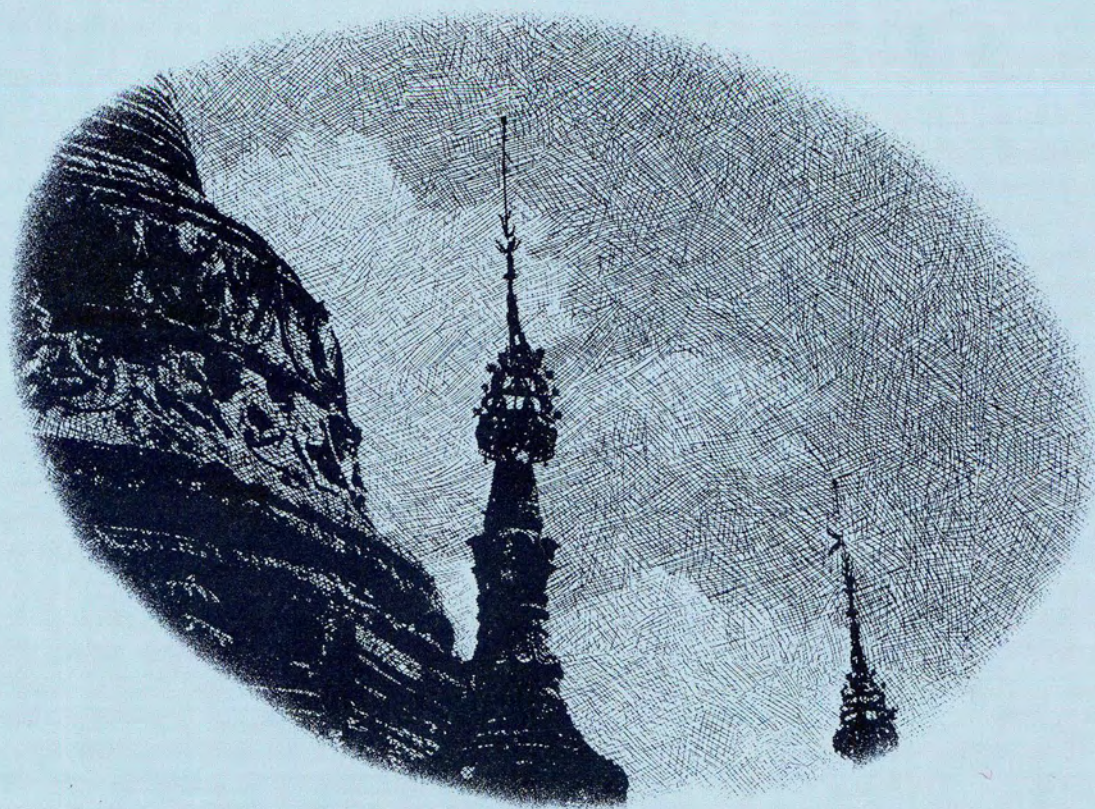

The exercise, ordered by the Commander-in-Chief, United States Army, Pacific, at the request of the U.S. Army Combat Developments Command, was designed to evaluate the effectiveness of a ROAD (Reorganization Objective Army Division) brigade in counterinsurgency/guerrilla operations and to determine the suitability of employing armored cavalry in counterinsurgency warfare.

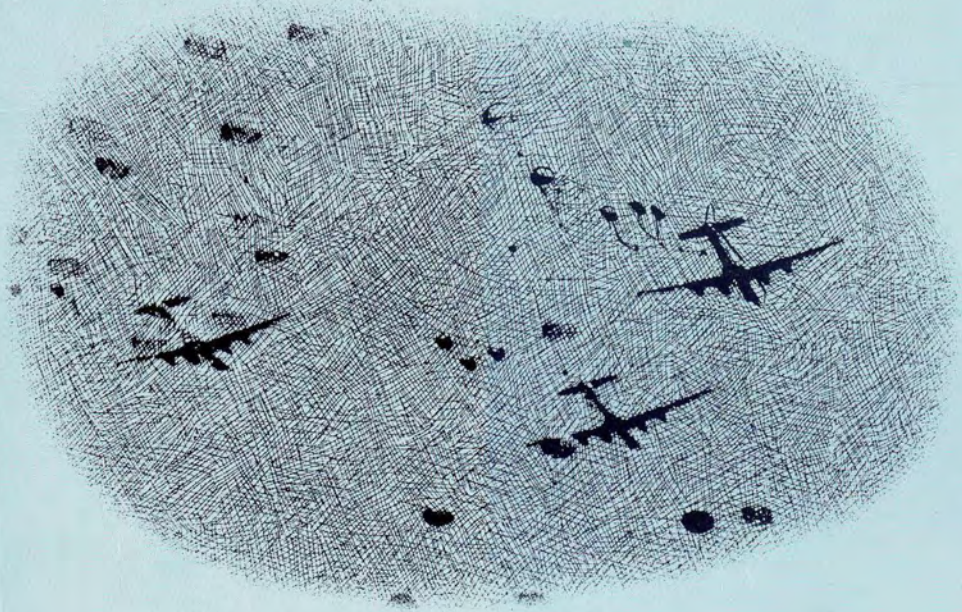

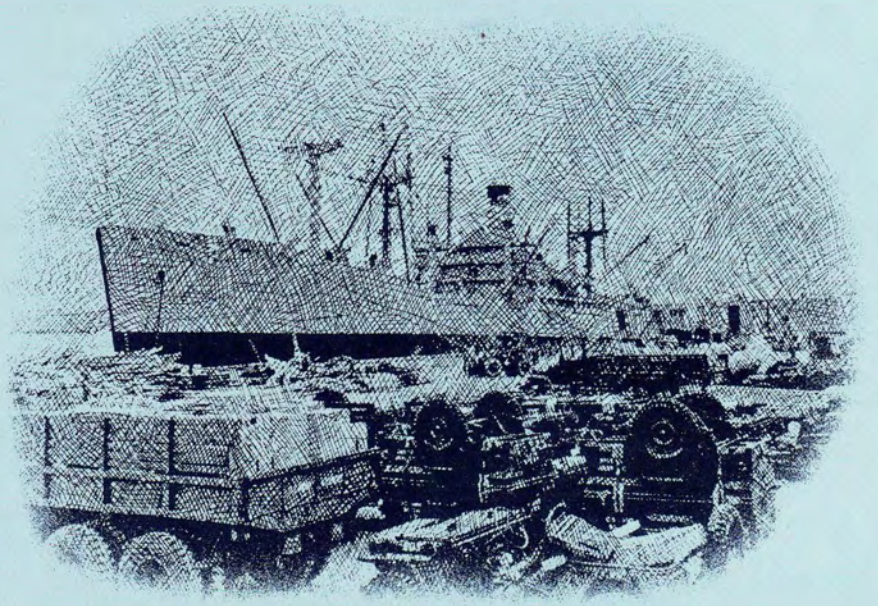

Black Night

The adventures of field training and mobility exercises often carried "Tropic Lightning" soldiers past the boundaries of the Aloha State. During recent years, elements of the 25th Infantry Division have given tangible proof of their military prowess from Thailand to Taiwan to Okinawa.

Dhanarajata

There is more to the story of the 1963 Southeast Asia Treaty Organization Exercise "Dhanarajata" than the story of the coordinated military efforts and activities of the eight member nations' armies.

For the American soldiers of the 25th Infantry Division, from general to private, Exercise "Dhanarajata" was another exercise in the ability of the "Tropic Lightning" soldier to practice the art of getting along with people.

It has been said that the American soldier is also an ambassador, and "Dhanarajata" showed like 1962's Exercise "Air Cobra" with the 27th Infantry, and later actions by the 1st Battle Group, 35th Infantry, that the Schofield soldiers haven't lost the knack of making friends from Kalakaua Avenue to Korat.

"You lose sleep, you get tired and wet,

And so went the intensive "fighting" between the "friendly" forces of Okinawa's 173rd Airborne Brigade (Separate) and the highly-trained aggressors of the "Tropic Lightning" Division's 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry.

was no live ammunition and no actual

Training Exercise, was conducted in Taiwan October 27 through November 5, 1964, when American and Chinese paratroopers jumped into a maneuver area in the central part of Taiwan.

During the exercise, Sino-American Army and Air Force units provided ten days of exercise conducted by United States and Republic of China forces in recent years.

Today, the two exercise "enemies" are fighting a common enemy in Vietnam.

Quick Release

For exercise "Quick Release," troops of the 25th Infantry Division Brigade Task Force, 2nd Brigade, were airlifted by Military Air Transport Service (MATS) to Okinawa with each soldier carrying only the minimum essential personal and light equipment. The heavy equipment, including artillery, tanks and other necessary hardware, was issued from the Forward Floating Depot to the task force upon its arrival.

This new approach, tried for the first time in the Pacific Command, would speed the delivery of troops to trouble spots and reduce requirements for airlift during the initial stages of an operation. Equipment was stowed aboard the converted Victory Ships in ready condition.

Within this concept, troops transported by air and the depot moved to the same port or one near the operational zone in a coordinated movement.

A soldier cannot fight in the jungle until he learns to survive in the jungle. The same soldier must use the jungle as a friend, not as an enemy. With proper training a soldier can become a skilled jungle fighter. This was proven again and again by the 25th Infantry Division which, only 25 miles from Waikiki's beaches in Hawaii, trained every man in the Division at a unique Special Asian Warfare Training and Orientation Center.

The "Tropic Lightning" Division soldier learned how to survive in the jungle from instructors—themselves trained in the jungles of Southeast Asia during SEATO exercises in Thailand or on the battlefield of Vietnam.

Special Asian Warfare Training And Orientation Center

Established in 1956, the 25th Infantry Division Jungle and Guerrilla Warfare Center was designated by the Army to serve as the model for similar establishments for all the Army's divisions.

Located in the rugged, jungle-like terrain in the foothills of Oahu's Koolau Mountains, the center prepped its soldiers at nine stations designed to teach him first to survive in the jungle, second to fight in the jungle.

Jungle and Guerrilla Warfare Center

Every man in the 25th Infantry Division trained at the center at least once each year; the course of instruction lasted five and one-half days and was divided into two phases: instruction and practical application under combat conditions in the field.

During the first phase—three days—the soldier went through each of the nine stations. He learned mountain climbing and rappelling, the latter from cliffs and helicopters; first aid and hygiene in the jungle; field crafts and the building of shelters from available materials; survival, which taught him how to obtain food and water in the jungle, to trap fish, birds and animals, to distinguish between edible and poisonous plants, to obtain water and oil from coconuts and to weave from grasses and leaves.

"Tropic Lightning" soldiers also learned to cross water, with their weapons and equipment, on ropes and to build rafts from their own ponchos, their trousers, coconuts, ammunition boxes, or any other materials; land navigation by day and night through seemingly impenetrable jungles.

At other stations they learned guerrilla tactics; to set ambushes and to counter ambushes, and aerial resupply and evacuation.

The second phase of the training was Operation "Bushwacker," a two and one-half day field exercise during which the entire company taking the training was required to fight its way through guerrilla-occupied territory, using the information given during the first three days of training.

The 25th Infantry Division jungle training program focused the Division's attention on that type of warfare in which the Division was most likely to be committed. The major contribution of the program was to consolidate past lessons learned in tropic environment and to mold the "Tropic Lightning" organization and equipment to meet the severe test of jungle operations in preparing for . . . if not the inevitable . . . the possible.

Kara Village

Troops of the 25th Infantry "Tropic Lightning" Division have been trained to fight both conventional and guerrilla forces in the Pacific Area. A guerrilla force is like the top of an iceberg; the supporting civilian organization, without which it cannot survive, is the much larger part that cannot be seen. Just as control of the air has become a prerequisite for successful regular warfare, so the control of the civilian population is a prerequisite for successful guerrilla warfare. From the outset of conflict, a major struggle for control of the civilian population will take place and will continue throughout the course of the war. Each side must try to organize the civilian population into a tightly disciplined force and through propaganda and police activities try to break the grip exercised by its adversary. "Tropic Lightning" soldiers now fighting in Vietnam were prepared for this type of warfare at Kara village, Schofield Barracks.

Kara village, located at Schofield Barrack's East Range, was a bustling replica of "anywhere" in Southeast Asia, complete with inhabitants. Food, clothing, and sometimes the dialect were as real as it could be made. This complex was patterned after a village in the upland portion of the Republic of Vietnam. Similar villages and situations as depicted here at Kara may be found in other parts of Southeast Asia. Kara was used as a training vehicle to instruct the men of the famed 25th Division in the methods and techniques of entering a village.

The 25th Infantry Division had 12 such mock villages located in the Koolau Mountains of Hawaii where troop units put into practice during Field Training Exercises the teaching points of instruction. The people of this village, or "Lang" as it is called in Vietnamese, made their living by primitive methods of farming, fishing, trade with other villages and the sale of small handmade objects to larger towns.

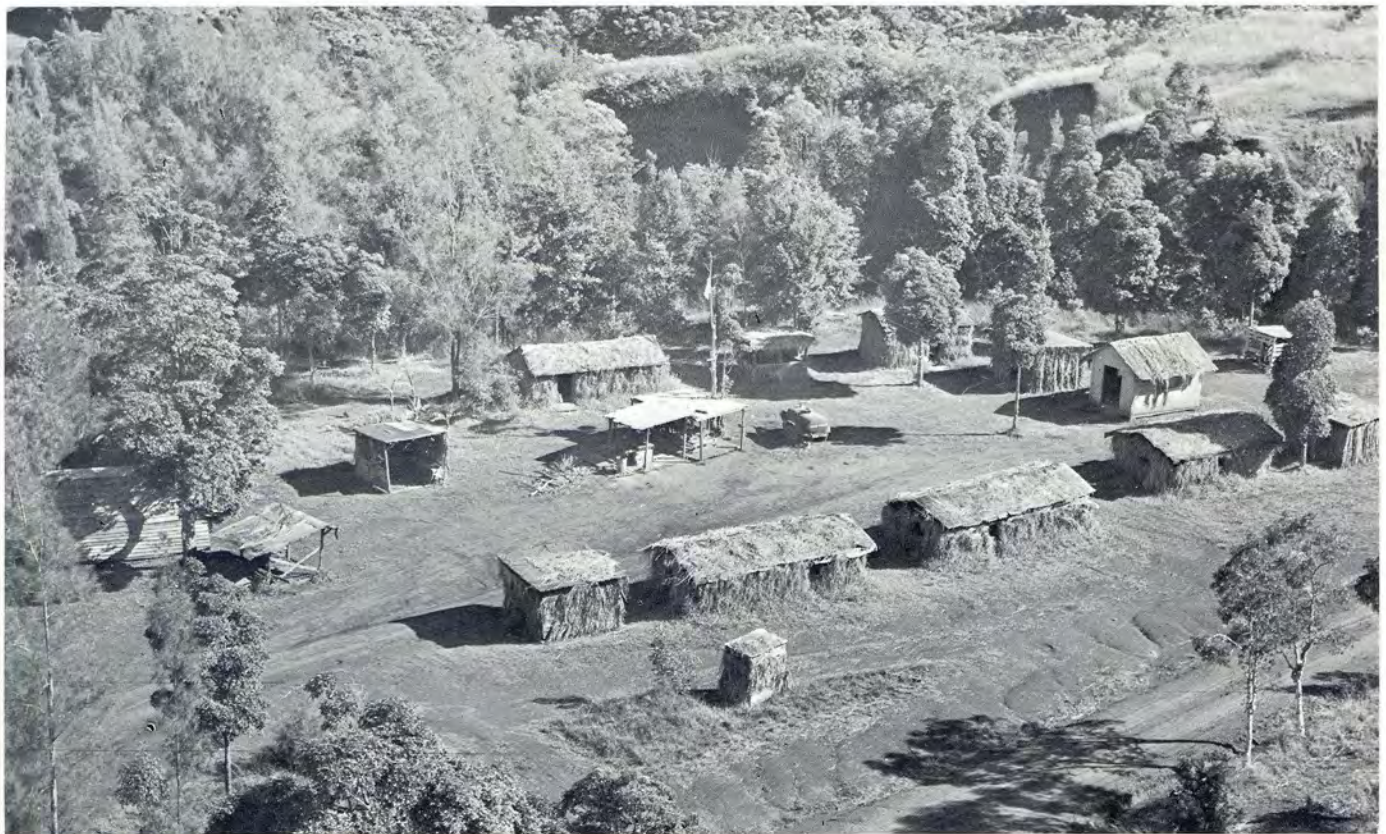

Basically, Kara was used to stress the Army's civil affairs program of assisting the local population in defending themselves, improving their standards of living and establishing a working relationship between the villagers and U. S. troops. Additionally, it offered an opportunity for training in the procedures employed when entering a strange village.

Instruction at Kara for 25th Infantry Division soldiers was divided into four phases. During Phase I the soldier was shown, by means of a skit, a platoon leader issuing his operations order in the company assembly area. He was also introduced to "Mr. Chin," a local province official sent to the platoon to act as interpreter and guide. "Mr. Chin" explained some of the local customs of Kara and informed the platoon of the local governmental structure. Phase II consisted of the arrival of the platoon in Kara and the platoon leader's initial contact with the village chief. The platoon leader had the chief read a proclamation from the central government and lay the groundwork for the establishment of a Community Relations Advisory Council. Phase III took place 24 hours after the first meeting of the chief and the platoon leader. The platoon leader and the chief would sit down at the chief's council table to discuss problems pertinent to the U.S. Forces and the villagers. Finally, in Phase IV the soldiers of the 25th Infantry Division were shown Kara as a village suspected of being sympathetic to the cause of the Viet Cong.

Code of Conduct

In the foothills of Oahu's razor-tipped Koolau Mountains was the 25th Infantry Division Code of Conduct Station where some 14,000 soldiers a year were taught the U.S. fighting man's Code of Conduct.

In a simulated compound patterned after POW camps U.S. soldiers encountered in North Korea, soldiers were taught through carefully worded scripts and demonstrations the U.S. Code of Conduct, POW compound organization and the principles of how to plan and carry out escape and evasion.

Menacing as the training may have seemed, the Division took careful steps to insure that no soldiers undergoing the training were physically harmed or mistreated.

The key to the entire four-hour block of instruction at the camp was the demonstrations soldiers witnessed from the time they marched into the barbed wire enclosed compound with their arms locked on their heads until they viewed the last of three hour-long skits based on records of conditions known to exist in various POW camps.

This activity was all part of a U.S. Army project—a simulated Communist prisoner-of-war camp in which American fighting men were shown what they would face if taken prisoner by Communist forces. In a nutshell, the project was aimed at teaching servicemen how to bear up under the worst the enemy can give and still maintain silence. The project was begun eight years ago but was kept confidential until September 1963 when officials of the "Tropic Lightning" Division lifted the ban.

When the Division announced its simulated prisoner-of-war camp, only one other such camp was known to exist in the United States and it was operated during the summer for cadets at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.

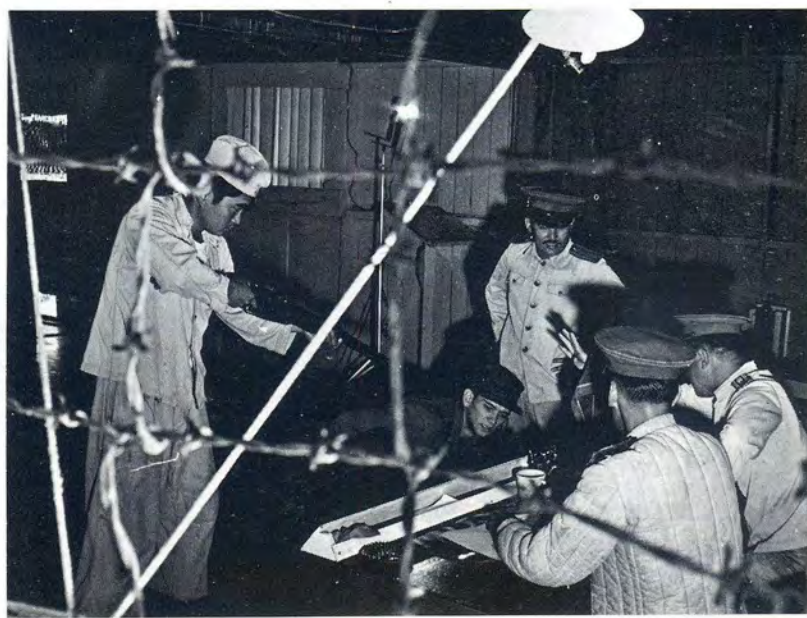

An officer there said, however, that camp probably wasn't as realistic as the one near Honolulu and amounted to merely a lecture area with prison camp atmosphere and facilities to present demonstrations of Red torture techniques. The Honolulu camp was realistic to the point that those engaged in the demonstrations often suffered bumps and bruises.

As the visitor toured the compound, he saw an American soldier, stripped to the waist and shackled to a pole stuck in the ground. His back covered with a blood-like substance, he moaned as a soldier in a North Korean uniform swatted at him with a heavy stick in a realistic simulation of a beating.

In another section of the compound, a group of soldiers, handpicked for the role of captives, underwent simulated beatings, stompings and other indignities. Suddenly a soldier was dragged, screaming, through the dirt street and locked in a black box so confining he was unable to move his arms the slightest bit. Everywhere soldiers acting out the part of prisoners-of-war were insulted, called "Capitalistic swine" and cursed for refusing to give the enemy information.

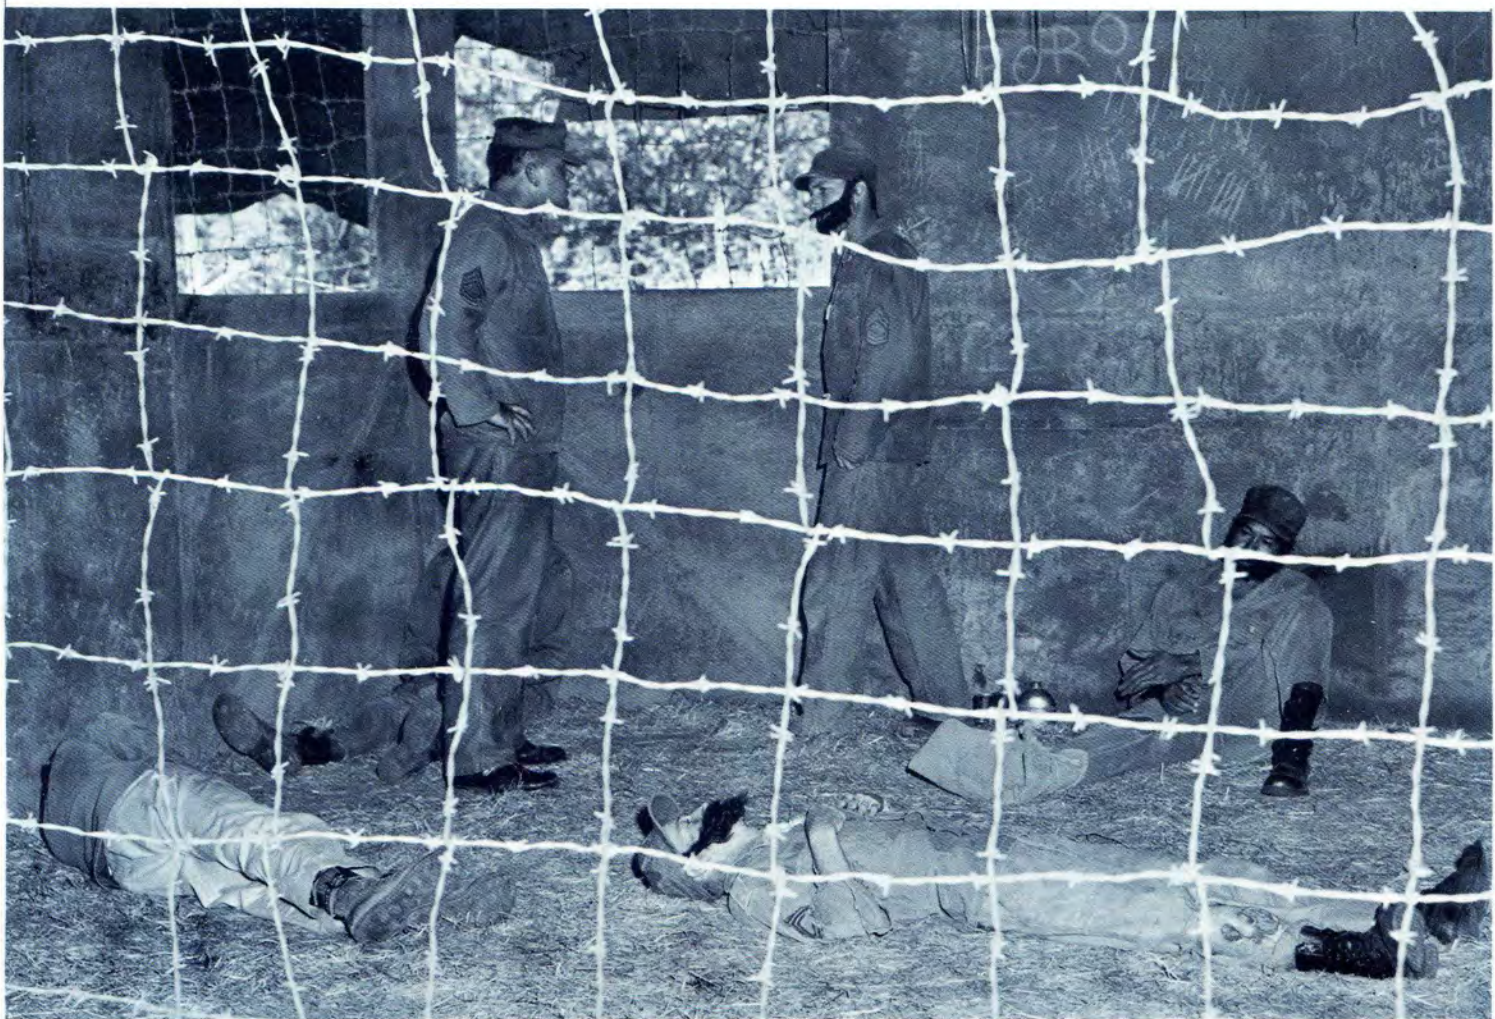

All the "guards" were chosen from among volunteers of Oriental or other ancestry whose facial characteristics resemble those of North Koreans. Many of the veterans of the camp demonstrations admitted they were "still a bit shocked by the realism of the camp."

The project began shortly after the Code of Conduct for members of the U.S. Armed Forces was adopted in 1958, directing, among other things, that an American serviceman "will make no oral or written statements" disloyal or harmful to his country or its allies. The code stipulates that the captured American serviceman must provide the enemy with nothing more than his name, rank, service number and date of birth. The camp illustrated to the servicemen what to look for and how to avoid the traps set by Red captors if ever they were taken prisoners of war. About 14,000 men have taken the training course each year since it was begun, including U.S. Marines, U.S. Navy and U.S. Air Force personnel.

" . . . I am an American fighting man . . . "

The Honolulu Advertiser (September 10, 1964, issue) carried a story that read in part . . . "Combat troops from the 25th Infantry Division at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, are being sent to Vietnam to serve as machine gunners aboard U.S. helicopters, Army spokesmen disclosed here yesterday.

"This is the first acknowledgment by a U.S. agency that some American troops are being committed to the Vietnam War in capacities other than as 'advisers.'"

Today, the story, as the name, is antiquated. The nickname "shotgun riders" is taken from the Wild West days when shotgun-carrying guards accompanied stagecoaches on cross-country runs.

The quick draw of those shotgunners was replaced by the "Tropic Lightning" draw of the 25th Infantry Division soldier who rode "Shotgun" in Vietnam from January 1963 to January 1966.

To kill a tiger, learn the ways of a tiger.

That was the theme of the program for training "Shotgunners"—or officially, Aerial Door Gunners—those tough, skilled soldiers who, in the tradition of their counterparts on the stagecoaches of the old West, protected their UH-1 "Sky-coaches" while flying over South Vietnam.

It was the fall of 1962 when the U.S. Military Assistance Command, Vietnam, asked Department of the Army for help in protecting the troop-carrying helicopters being used to fight the Viet Cong. By January 1963, the 25th Infantry Division had responded to the call and had sent the first group of 100 volunteer aerial door gunners to Southeast Asia.

Three years and 2,200 men later, the "Tropic Lightning" Division's highly regarded "Shotgun" program came to a close. Its members had compiled an enviable record of combat in a modern application of the stagecoach shotgunners of wild west days.

Before the 25th's soldiers entered the conflict, crew chiefs, ground mechanics and almost anyone who could fire a rifle were pressed into service to return the hostile fire launched against helicopters by the enemy. The workload became unbearable, however, as overworked maintenance personnel were forced to concentrate on two jobs.

When Shotgun 1 left Hawaii more than three-and-a-half years ago, helicopter crew members were able to return to their primary jobs—that of keeping the choppers in peak operating condition.

The gunners earned four Silver Stars, seven Soldier's Medals and 26 Bronze Stars for gallantry under fire. Additionally, more than 2,100 Air Medals were awarded to shotgunners for the tens of thousands of combat hours they logged in the air and another 92 Army Commendation Medals were presented the men for outstanding performance of duty.

The four weeks devoted to training shotgunners in Hawaii were filled with subjects designed to accustom the soldier to his new job and to help him survive in enemy territory.

Becoming a shotgunner was not easy. Each man, before he could even begin training, was required to pass a Class III flight physical examination. His vision, color perception, hearing and other physical conditions were closely checked.

Gunners were told what to expect of Vietnam as a country and how to treat themselves with emergency medical care. Also the Division Surgeon's Office explained the different diseases peculiar to the Southeast Asian area and their prevention.

At the Division's Code of Conduct Field Training Station, a Hawaiian version of a North Korean prisoner of war camp, they learned what to expect if they should fall into enemy hands. There they were captured and harassed in a demonstration of enemy prisoner handling.

To face the prospect of having to negotiate a body of water, the soldiers were also taught how to handle themselves should their choppers be shot down over water.

Some of the men who left in September 1965 will never forget the "Nights in Waikiki," to which they were treated by an anonymous California benefactor. When her visit to Hawaii had to be curtailed, she requested her unspent money be used for servicemen headed for Vietnam.

Nor will they forget the day-long visit by Julie Andrews, star of the movie "Hawaii" and recipient of the Academy Award for her performance in "Mary Poppins." Before leaving, she said she wanted to leave something for the men "for luck," and taking out a small, white handkerchief, she tied it to one of their machine guns.

After the men had completed their training, they waited with anticipation for word on when they would be leaving. Knowing what was ahead of them, and what was expected of them, they were confident that the training they received had been the best.

In a speech before the Senate, and recorded in the Congressional Record, Senator Daniel K. Inouye of Hawaii said, "Within the 25th Infantry Division there is an elite corps of officers and men carrying on the finest traditions of the American fighting man. They are called shotgunners by their friends, and a far worse name by the Viet Cong they volunteer to fight. They know who the enemy of world freedom is—they believe in what they are doing—and as the 25th Infantry Division motto states, they are 'Ready to Strike, Anywhere! Anytime!'"

Captain Glenn N. Smith headed the "First in-Last out" outfit—the first unit to leave Hawaii since early 1964 when soldiers went to Taiwan on war game exercises. General John K. Waters, Commander-in-Chief, United States Army, Pacific, visited the 65th Engineer Battalion at Schofield Barracks prior to its departure. Before inspecting the men, General Waters received a briefing on the training of C Company by Captain Smith, the company commander. General Waters concluded his visit by congratulating Captain Smith on his state of readiness for any mission they might be called upon to carry out.

"Charlie" departs.

It was a quiet and peaceful Sunday morning at Schofield Barracks. The usual pastoral scene. There was no suggestion, no possible intimation to "outsiders" of Quad I how August 22, 1965, was being honored by "Charlie" Company, 65th Engineer Battalion.

It happened fast, yet free from noise and disturbance. More than 170 fully-equipped men were assembled . . . roll was called . . . then all hustled into waiting buses.

Forty-five minutes later: Pier 40. The proud company banner was carried aboard the Military Sea Transportation Service transport, General Edwin D. Patrick. Destination . . . Southeast Asia.

A few hours later, the Patrick sailed out of sight.

The engineers, who landed September 7 at Cam Ranh Bay, a former French resort area, found little to be reminiscent of home, other than the attitude of the friendly, but reserved Vietnamese people.

The more than 170 men dug in on a plain-like area similar to the way Hawaii's Plains of Waianae, home of Schofield Barracks, must have looked around the turn of the century: hot and devoid of water.

But American ingenuity and the powerful U.S. supply line into this beleaguered country served the men well in turning a desolate field into a base of operations for construction, reconnaissance and rehabilitation work.

The same week in December 1965 the people of Honolulu, Hawaii, were commemorating "Pearl Harbor Day," the planners of the 25th Infantry Division were once again gathering data for yet another type of war. Those plans were fulfilled when the final fighting elements of the 2nd Brigade Task Force closed in an area near Cu Chi, a village some 20 miles northwest of Saigon. In less than two months, two "Tropic Lightning" Task Forces were honing their portion of the mission of the 25th Division, to assist Vietnamese people in the struggle against communist aggressors.

For World War II and Korean veterans of the 25th, it was like "coming home."

They were ready to expand on the combat record of more than a thousand days of previous 25th Division combat time on this side of the world.

The 3rd Brigade, commanded by Colonel Everette A. Stoutner, started its record-breaking airlift, "Blue Light," on New Year's Day 1966 and 25 days later, more than 9,000 tons of equipment and 4,000 men were on the ground at Pleiku.

With more than 4,000 troops and nearly 9,000 tons of war machinery, the 2nd Brigade, commanded by Colonel Lynnwood M. Johnson Jr., took a more circuitous route. Using five cargo and two troop ships, they made their "Green Light" trip in just over a month. The 30 days included loading in Hawaii, the sea voyage, unloading and a staging period in the Bien Hoa area near Saigon.

25th Division to leave in 2 weeks

By LYLE NELSON
Military Writer

Most of the 25th Infantry Division will leave for Vietnam within two weeks.

Army officers at Schofield Barracks will say nothing. Activity at the base, however, indicates something is in the wind and that a troop movement is imminent even though official channels won't talk.

Reportedly ships and planes will soon converge on Oahu to transport between 8,000 and 10,000 men to the war zone by the first of the year.

There were indications everywhere that soldiers had been tipped by their superiors to prepare for deployment.

Soldiers having a quiet beer in Wahiawa bars were tight-lipped. As one bartender said, "They're sure well trained. They don't talk."

Speculation mounted all through the week that deployment wheels are grinding.

Eventual commitment of the 25th in Vietnam was predicted from Saigon by Chicago Daily News correspondent Keyes Beech.

Last week the 25th confirmed that two large troop deployment-type exercises were scheduled to occur soon.

The exercises are called Holokai 11 and 12 and involve the 4,220-man 2nd Brigade, which includes both infantry battalions of the 27th Wolfhounds, and the 3rd Brigade, which has two infantry battalions of the 35th Cacti.

Not on the exercise schedule is the 1st Brigade.

The exercises are termed "outloading" exercises, which means doing everything necessary to prepare for deployment.

This means immunizations, if needed, and making out allotments, and otherwise providing for families.

With Washington officials indicating that a continuous troop build-up in Vietnam is needed, the finger has to point to the 25th.

The "outloading" exercises and general military activity at Schofield add up to an Army, that has been held in waiting, finally on the move.

The 16,000-man force has been located at Schofield Barracks since September 21, 1954.

That's when the "Tropic Lightning" Division returned here from occupation duty in Korea.

'Goodbye Sweetheart, Hello Vietnam':

The division recently announced plans to add two infantry battalions to beef up the division's rifle-carrying strength.

These men are expected to arrive in small groups from Mainland Army training schools shortly.

It may take several months to train these men.

With the 2nd and 3rd Brigades gone it would leave up to the remaining 1st Brigade to train these new men and incorporate them into the ranks.

The 2nd and 3rd Brigades have the equivalent of three infantry battalions in each.

The 2nd Brigade task force for the Holokai exercise consists of the 1st and 2nd Battalions of the 27th (Wolfhounds) Infantry and the 1st Battalion of the 5th (Cacti), which is mechanized.

The 3rd Brigade consists of the 1st Battalion of the 14th (Cacti) Infantry and the 1st Battalion of the 1st (Cacti) Infantry. Turn to Page A-13, Col.

Tanned from the beaches of Hawaii, where the Division had been stationed since 1954, and lean from the months and years of tough jungle training, the men looked the part of the gallant combat veterans they were to become in the early moments ahead.

At the Pleiku Airstrip there was no time for small talk—no time for stretching legs after the long Pacific flight. As Colonel Stoutner loaded his men on convoys for the trip to their new home, a barren patch of land nestled in the Vietnam countryside, a crew of men unloaded the mass of equipment the men brought with them.

The 2nd Brigade, however, was also greeted with the sounds of war, as Air Force A1E "Skyraiders" dropped their 250 pound bombs, released napalm and fired rockets at a Viet Cong platoon skirting the brigade's perimeter, while the long truck convoys pulled into their new "home."

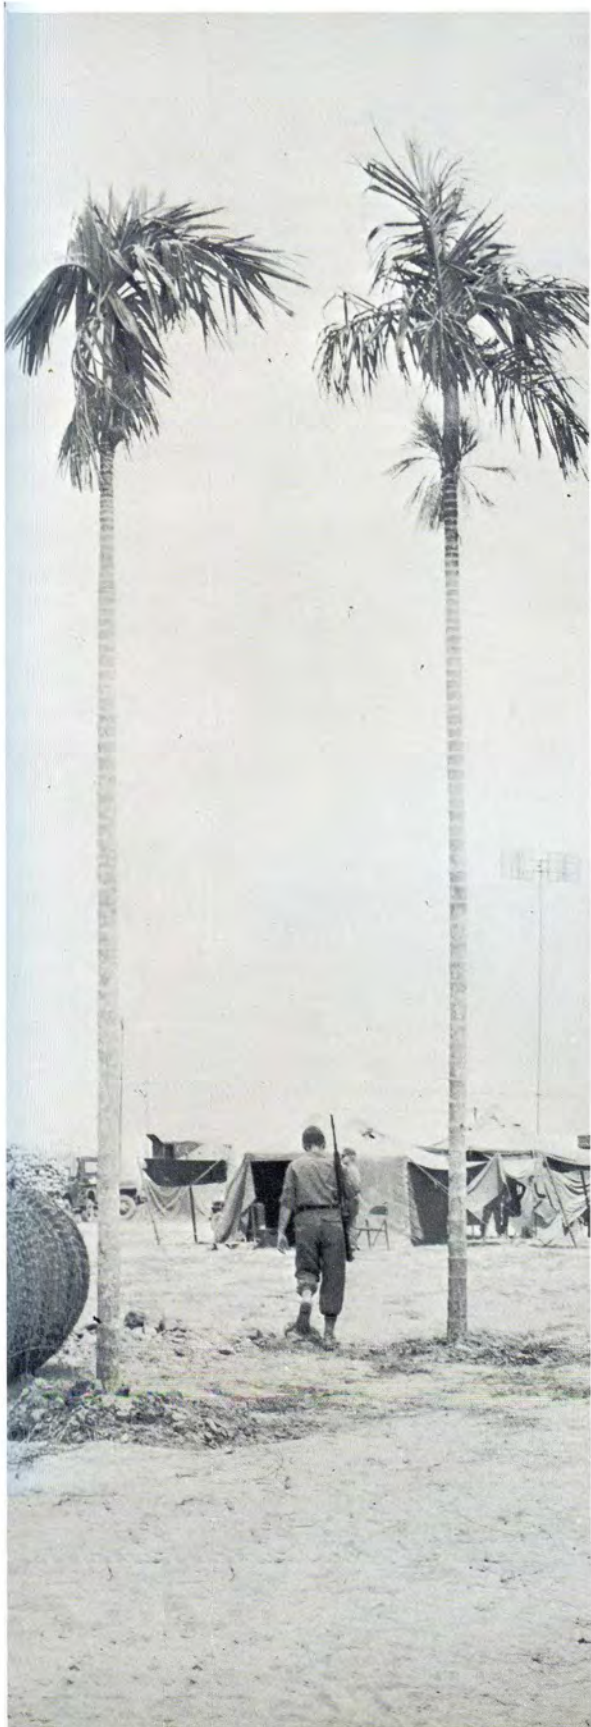

Command and "pup" tents went up immediately. Barbed wire barricades surrounded the encampment. In a few short minutes, mortars were pointing at the lurking enemy.

The Pleiku and Cu Chi based "Lightning-aires" stripped down to their green T-shirts and began digging the soldier's second friend—his foxhole. His best friend, the rifle, was always within reach.

In both brigade areas, the problem of dust brought back to the "Tropic Lightning" soldier memories of his training days in the lava beds of Hawaii. Those training days are gone and again the 25th Infantry Division has been called upon to add its "Tropic Lightning" attack to the battle.

Before the dust settled in the two brigade camp areas, the famed Hawaiian-based Division welcomed a contingent of troops from Division Artillery, Support Command and Division Headquarters in March.

The final move from Hawaii for the 25th Division was in April when the 1st Brigade arrived at Vung Tau and then moved to Cu Chi to take its place alongside other elements of the Division . . . in combat.

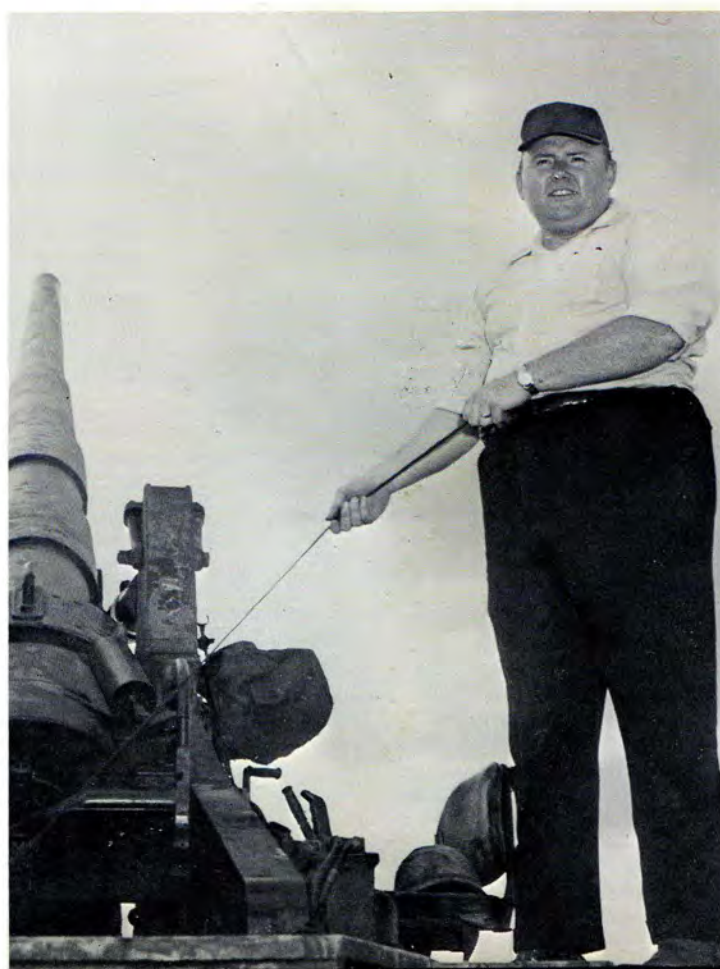

With the constant tat-tat-tat of Division Hueys and Chinooks lofting across the brazen sky at Pleiku and the blaring salutes from artillery omnipresent at Cu Chi, the shows continue to go on uninterrupted.

For the past 25 years the fury and horror of war was paralleled by entertainment for "Tropic Lightning" troops. World War II displayed Grable; Korea was delighted by Monroe and the war in Vietnam for the 25th Infantry Division has also been highlighted with guys and dolls bringing their songs and zany antics to the men of the 25th.

"Our Father Who Art in Heaven . . ."

The 25th Infantry Division finds the time amidst a battle environment to give thanks, pay homage and honor her Vietnam veterans who have borne arms against the enemy. The men are honored for their inspirational patriotism and their brave and faithful service. They gave their time, energies and talents and most important—life itself.

. . . "But Deliver Us From Evil, . . . Amen."

War has its serene moments and the Cu Chi and Pleiku base camps proved to be no exception.

Men of the "Tropic Lightning" Division basked in the tranquil atmosphere of reading mail from loved ones.

A constant perimeter watch was maintained and the lighter side of war passed unprevailing—but not unnoticed.

WAR! Three magnanimous alphabetic characters that achieved a stark realism for the men of the "Tropic Lightning" Division in an untamed and sniper-infested island in the middle of a sea of Viet Cong guerrillas.

Before elements of the 2nd Brigade could settle back and claim their new piece of real estate at Cu Chi, Vietnam, the entire area had to be cleaned out and the Viet Cong dragged out of the intricate tunnel complexes which honeycombed the base camp area.

Northeast of the base camp stands the infamous HoBo Woods, a patch of heavy forestation that even crack U.S. airborne troops haven't been able to deny to the VC.

To the north lies War Zone C, reported to be the Viet Cong command center for the whole country and to the south of the base camp the Oriental River flows blandly, carrying infiltrated men, supplies and equipment between the Viet Cong bases.

The unsung war chant of the 25th Infantry Division immediately struck a "We Belong Here" note.

In a series of moves designed to root the unwanted guests from the 25th Division's newly adopted homeland, Operations "Bobcat," "Taro Leaf I and II," "Clean Sweep I and II," "Paddy Bridge," "Search Out," "Flush Out," and "Kolchak I" slashed through extensive Viet Cong emplacements during the months of January and February 1966.

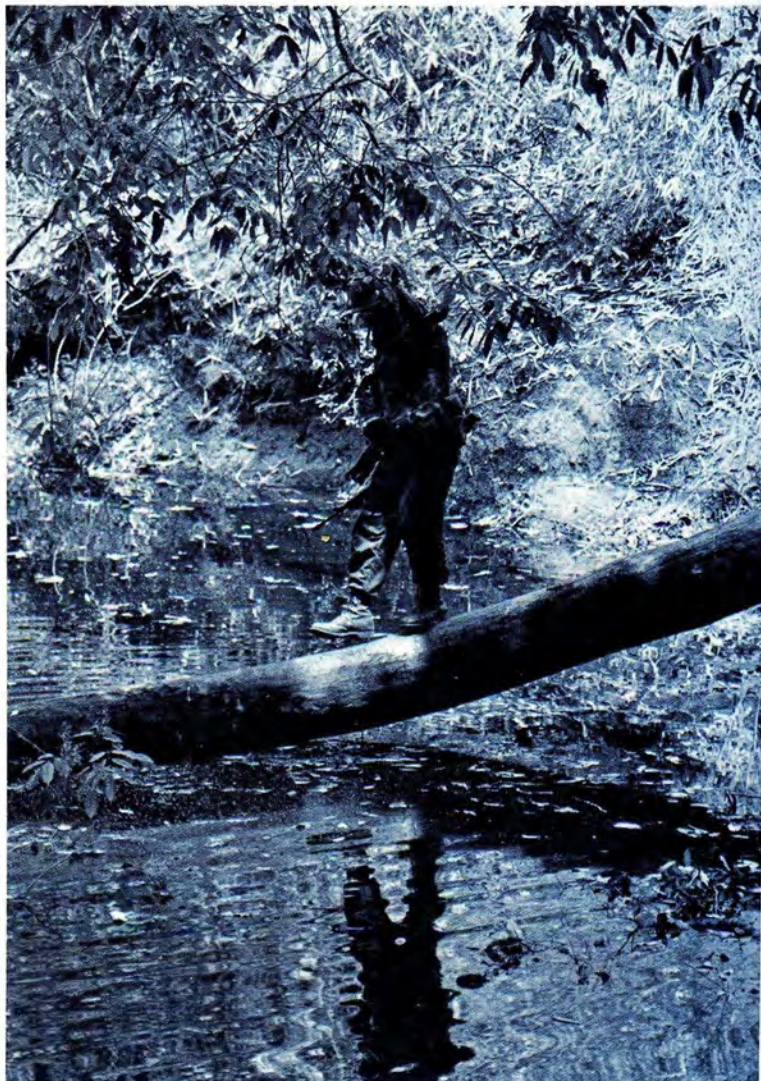

The once besieged wooded and seemingly impenetrable jungle camp area was leveled and made comparable to a golf course. Elements of the 2nd Brigade cut a swath through the area in an effort to destroy extensive VC tunnels and fortifications and expand the perimeter. Insurgents were destroyed, enemy ammunition and supply caches were confiscated, mines and booby traps were uncovered and neutralized.

After two months of pounding the enemy "round-the-clock" the 25th Division's enclave at Cu Chi was firmly established.

Also, during January and February, 250 miles north of Cu Chi, the 3rd Brigade Task Force at Pleiku was making history by opening the Viet Cong controlled Highway 19 during Operations "Kamehameha" and "Taylor." Once opened, the tons of supplies vital to wage successful battles began pouring into the 3rd Brigade base camp.

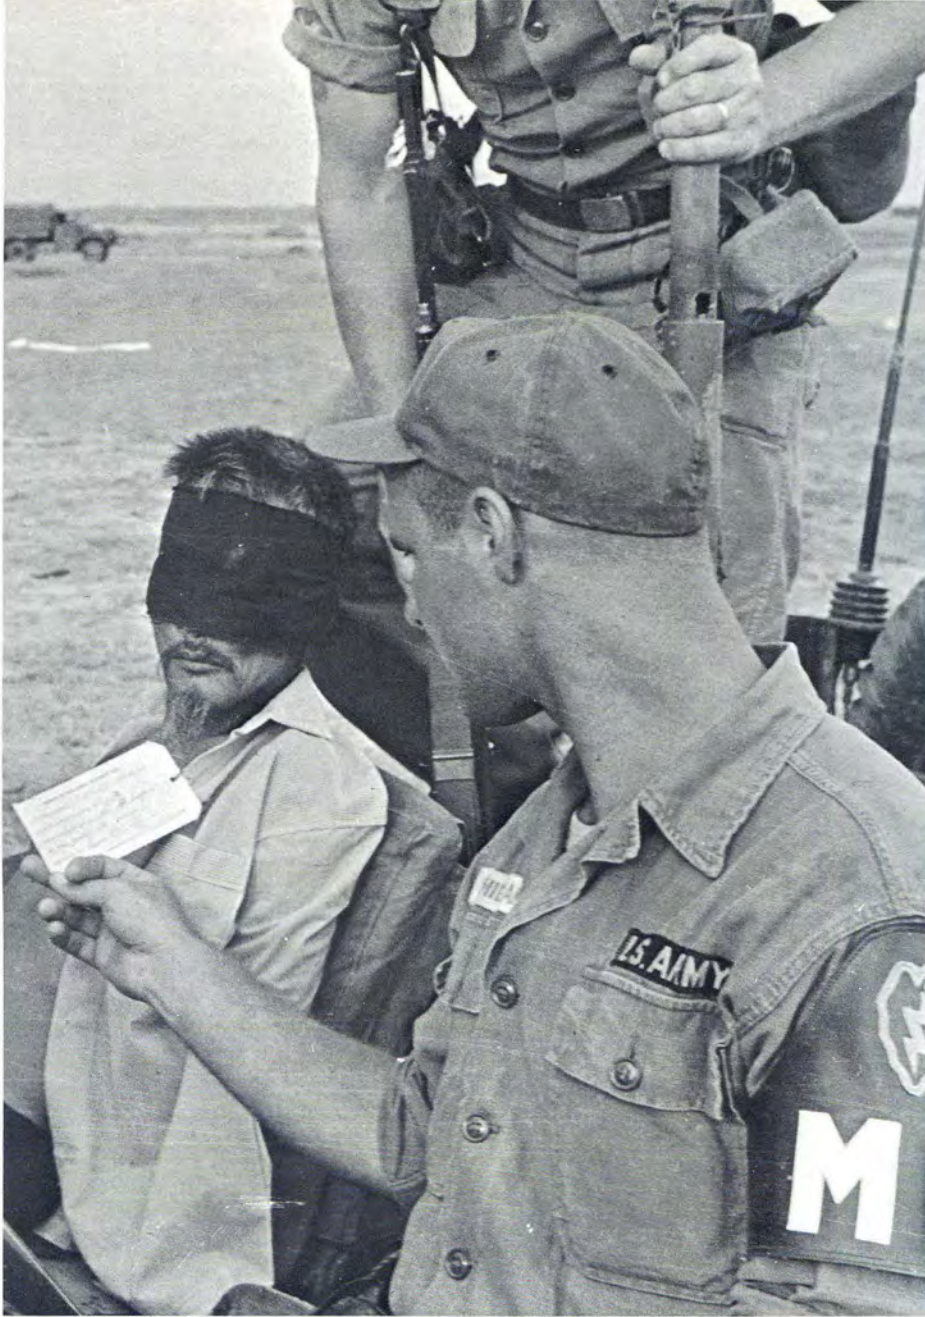

In order to protect the avenues of approach to the "Tropic Lightning" base camp, a series of operations with names to denote the ties with Hawaii were conducted during March, April and May 1966.

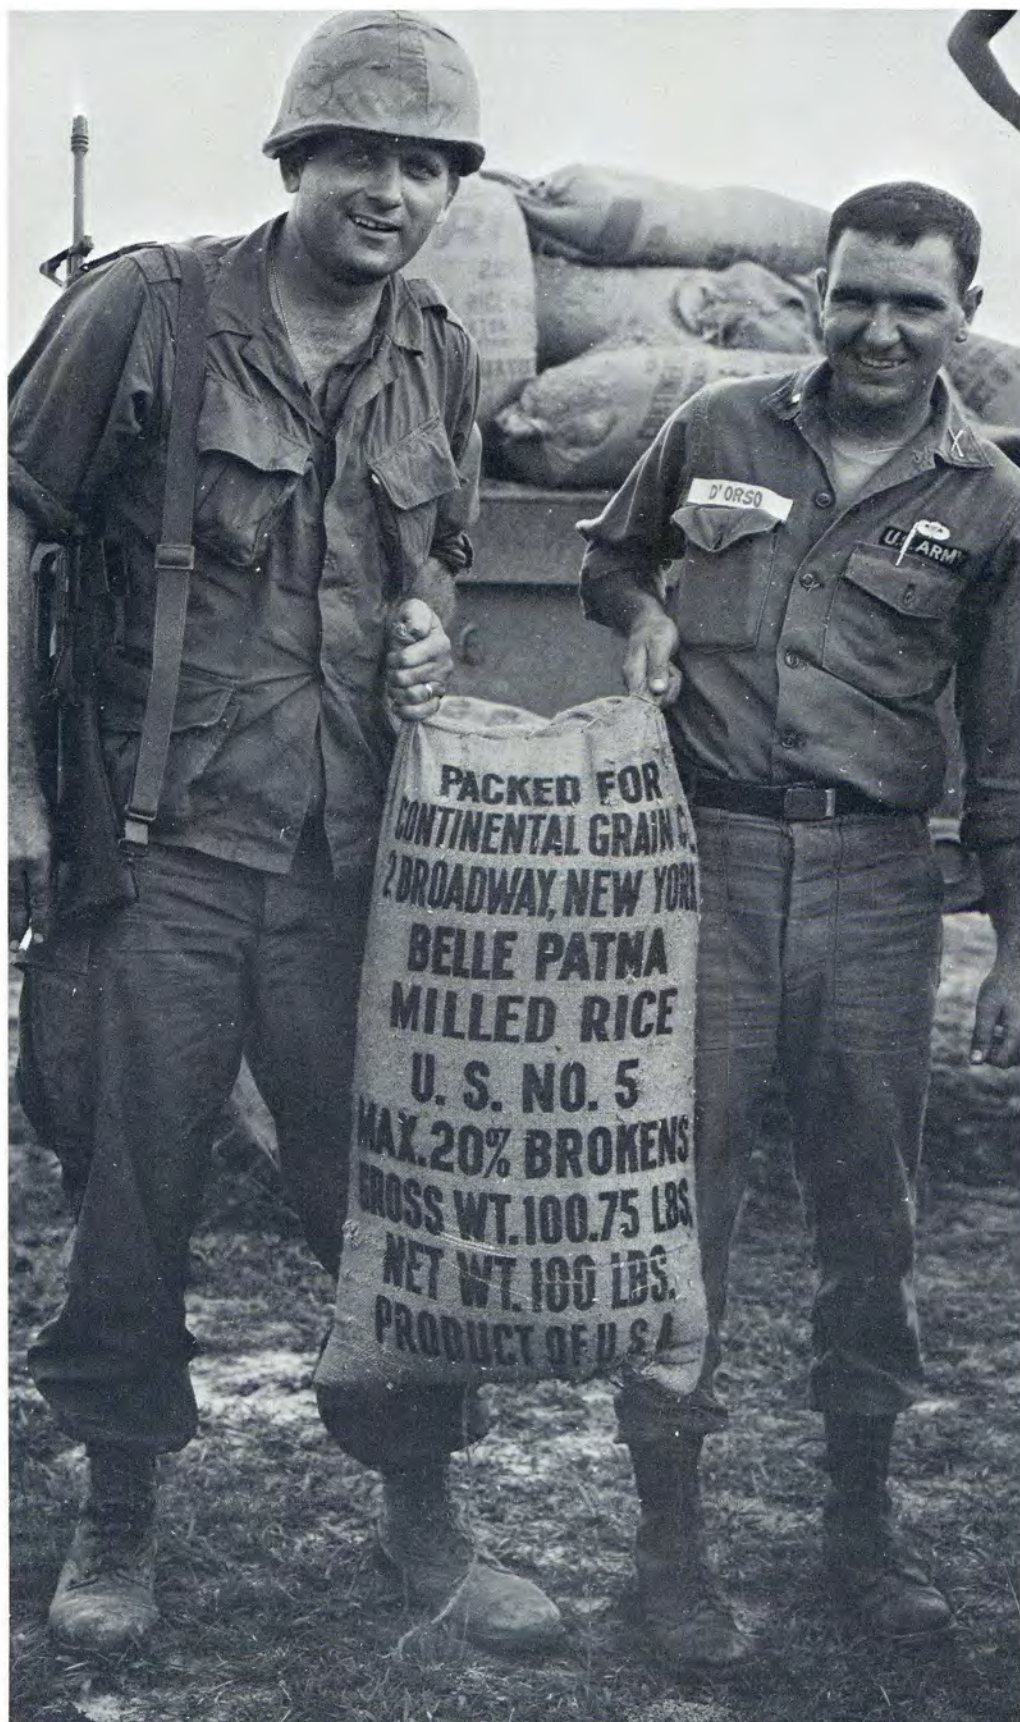

Operations "Waikiki," "Honolulu," "Kahuku," "Makaha," "Kaena," "Kahala," "Maili," "Lihue," "Wahiawa" and "Makiki," spear-headed by infantry, artillery and armor, literally cut down enemy havens and destroyed the fortified positions used by entrenched snipers.

While the swinging picks were still hacking into the dusty ground at Cu Chi, putting the finishing touches on tent kits, mess halls and working areas, Operations "Del Ray," "Circle Pines," "Akron" and "Asheville" continued to eliminate moderate to heavy Viet Cong resistance. Meanwhile, the stage was set at Pleiku for the 3rd Brigade Task Force undergoing Operations "Garfield," "Lincoln," "Longfellow" and "Paul Revere."

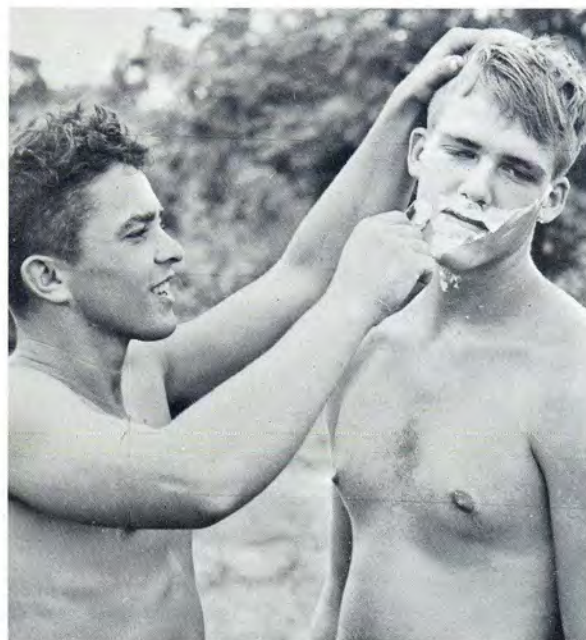

Within five months the 25th Infantry "Tropic Lightning" Division had once again made its indelible "Lightning" mark—this time on Viet Cong soil.

The land was fought and paid for by the valiant men of "taro leaf" fame.

Morale, after months of difficult conflict, was exceptionally high and buddies soon became brothers with a common bond.

Operations "Fort Smith," "Fresno" and "Santa Fe," area pacification missions conducted by the "Tropic Lightning," were combined with conventional military operations during June.

"Fort Smith" provided the villagers in the Ap An Binh area the opportunity to learn of their government's fight against communism through the thousands of leaflets dropped by American aircraft and by word of mouth from ARVN civic action workers and their fellow countrymen.

Operation "Fresno" resulted in "Tropic Lightning" soldiers capturing nine Viet Cong through the defection of a VC platoon leader. The platoon leader resettled with his family in one of the government's "new life" hamlets and began supporting—instead of defying—the government.

"Santa Fe" consisted of civic action programs, road construction, "Helping Hand" operations and the construction of an Army of the Republic of Vietnam compound.

In what was described as one of the largest single hauls of prisoners, enemy arms and ammunition in the III Corps area by any U. S. unit, the 1st Battalion (Mechanized), 5th Infantry, conducted a hard-fisted search and clear operation tabbed "Makiki." The 2nd Brigade mission in Hau Nghia Province netted an ammunition supply depot containing Russian carbines, Chinese carbines, German Mausers, Chinese sub-machine guns and Chinese anti-tank rockets.

During mid-June the 3rd Brigade Task Force continued to sweep the area west-southwest of Pleiku on Operation "Paul Revere."

Since the operation's inception, elements of the brigade accounted for 279 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong killed.

Most of the action occurred during an encounter earlier in the month which saw men of the task force in heavy engagement with what was later estimated as a North Vietnamese regiment. The Communists broke contact and withdrew to the west.

Notable operations for the Cu Chi based 25th Infantry Division during the same time included "Joliet," "Fargo," "Heleman," "Nogalis" and Ehu."

June closed with the 1st Battalion (Mechanized), 5th Infantry, severing a path through the HoBo Woods on Operation "Coco Palms." In addition to large stores of small arms ammunition, hand grenades, anti-tank mines, claymore mines and rifle grenades were taken.

The operation yielded 10 Viet Cong killed and two confirmed VC captured. The ensuing month saw the 1st Battalion, 27th Infantry, on Operation "Ewa," 23 miles southwest of the "Tropic Lightning" Division's Cu Chi base camp. The "Wolfhounds" conducted the search and destroy operation for five days, killing 14 Viet Cong and capturing six. Other operations moved men of the 25th on "Kahana I and II," "Mokuleia," "Koko Head," and "Oahu." By the end of July, the "Tropic Lightning" at Cu Chi had accounted for more than 1,000 dead VC since their arrival in Vietnam.

Combat Support

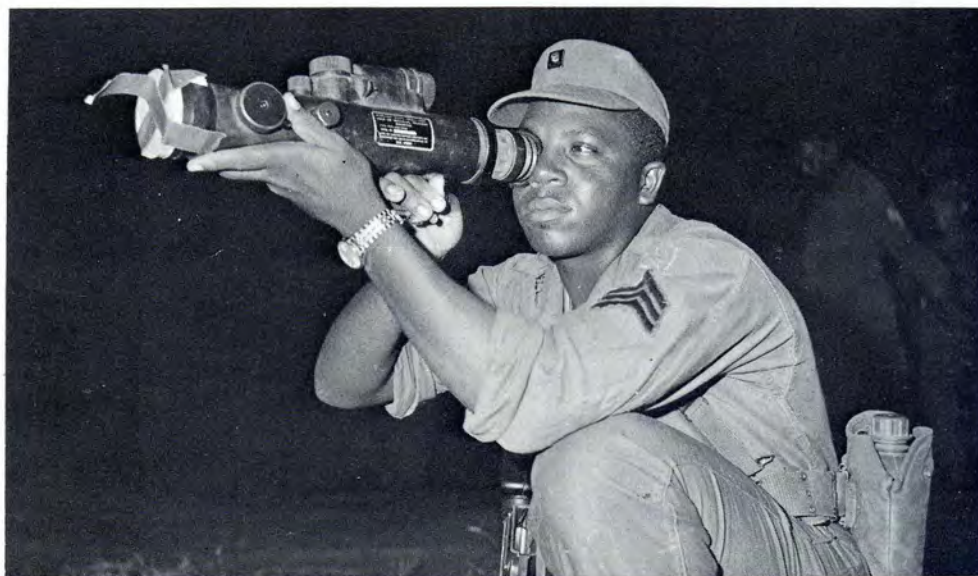

Mechanics, medics, engineers, artillerymen and other combat support elements of the "Tropic Lightning" Division are on the job daily to handle a thousand and one tasks essential to successful military operations in Vietnam. Some work alongside the infantryman—on the ground and in the air. Others stay behind, working hour after endless hour, doing their share of work in a complex organization which stands prepared to undertake the most difficult mission.

Ambush!—a fearsome word turned into a useful weapon of war. The Tropic Lightning's Ambush Academy teaches all the basics necessary for a successful ambush. The week-long training builds the teams to kill the Viet Cong . . . frustrate his actions . . . limit his movement . . . halt his resupply . . . ward off his attacks . . . hamper his nightly redeployment of troops. A unit that can ambush well, can do anything well.

The Ambush

. . . at Cu Chi

. . . the other war

. . . at Pleiku

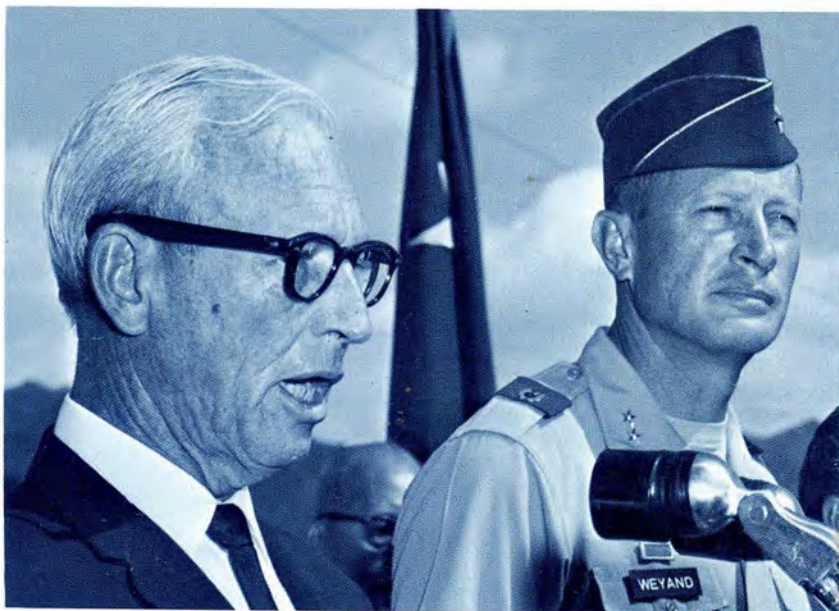

The fighting man of the 25th Infantry Division has mastered an additional trade. When he's not dodging snipers' bullets or pursuing the enemy, he goes into the villages and hamlets throughout areas where the "Tropic Lightning" Division is operating and provides medical assistance, distributes soap and toothpaste among the Vietnamese men, women and children—and lends a hand wherever help is needed most.

Elements of the "Tropic Lightning" have adopted entire communities in an effort to build them up and eliminate the fear of Viet Cong terrorism and harassment. Doctors and medics of the 25th Infantry Division carry their medical supplies and first aid packs into the homes of the sick and injured, as country doctors did in the United States fifty years ago.

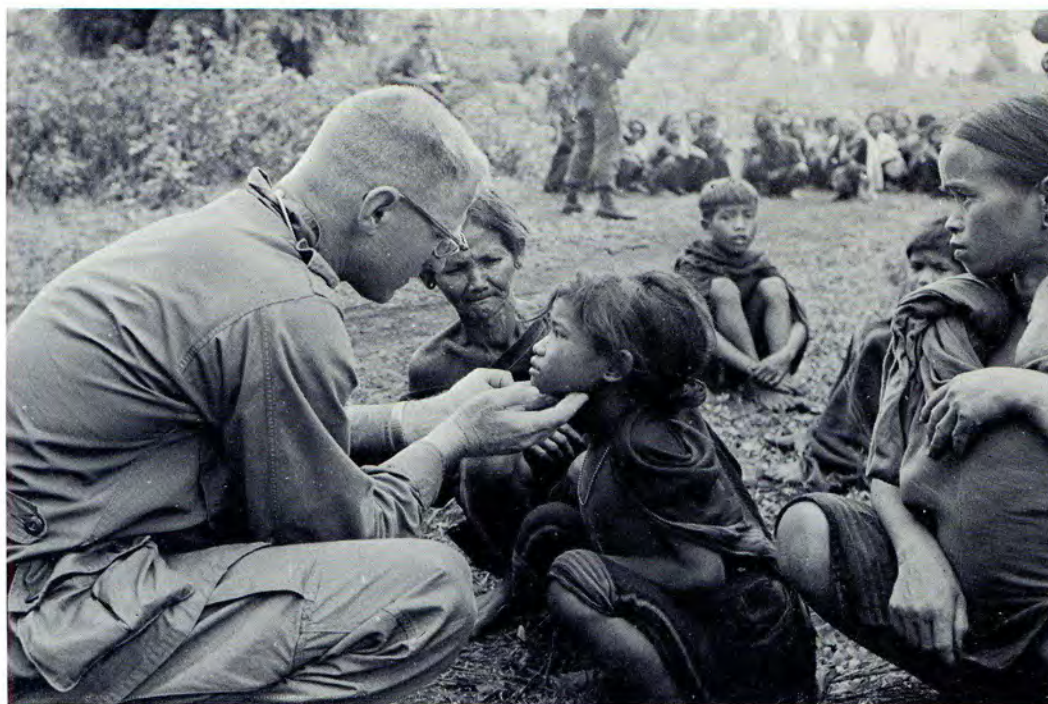

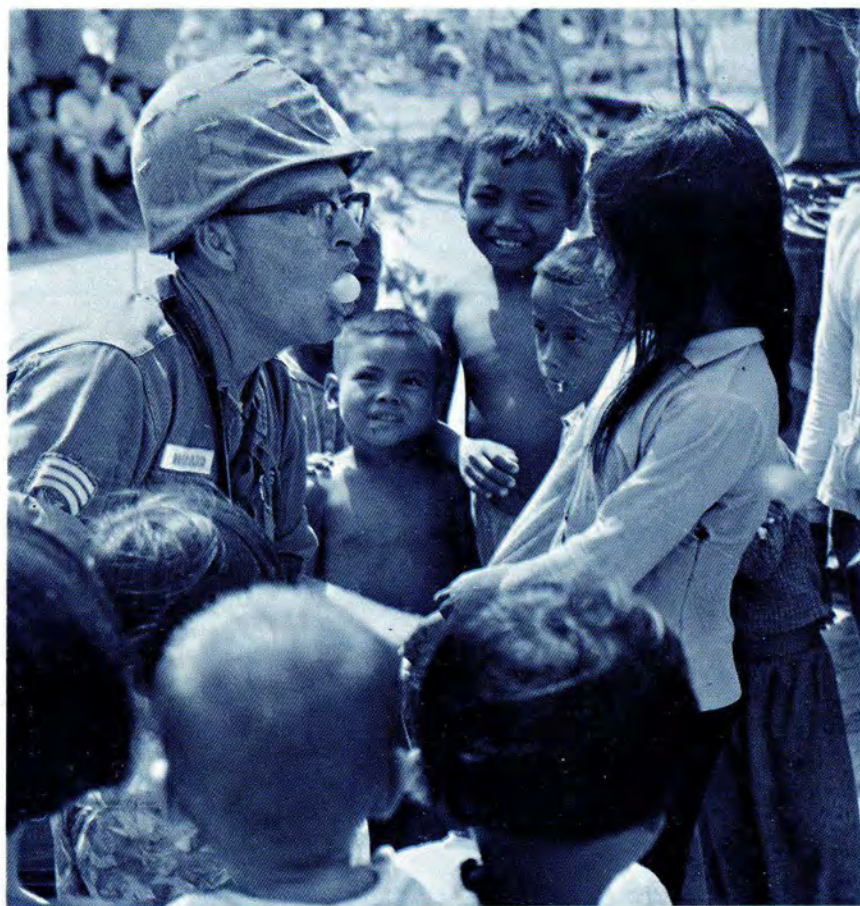

An integral part of the Division's civic action program is Operation "Helping Hand." Midway during the Division's departure from Schofield Barracks to Vietnam, the citizens of Hawaii began pouring in contributions of clothing, food, health and sanitary goods and educational material to the men of the 25th Infantry Division in an effort to help them bridge the gap between Americans fighting in Vietnam and the Vietnamese people.

"Helping Hand" materials have reached thousands of Vietnamese villagers during civic action programs conducted by the 25th Division.

From the modest homes of the villagers of Tan An Hoi, just outside the Division's Cu Chi base camp, to the dwellings of Montagnards in the central highlands near the 3rd Brigade's Pleiku base camp, bonds of friendship between the United States and Vietnam are strengthened day-by-day.

Everyone loves a parade, even amid the sound and fury of war. To the people in places like Tan An Hoi and Vinh Cu, the sound of a band represents friendship, mutual understanding, an interest in sharing the culture of a foreign nation. A gathering of soldiers provides an opportunity to exchange ideas, a chance to broaden the experience of helping others, a time to do good deeds. The men of the "Tropic Lightning" Division will long remember their associations and experiences in a strange country during the Silver Anniversary year—1966.

In an environment of hardship and sorrow, "Tropic Lightning" soldiers are discovering the rewards of their labor in the smiling faces of youngsters—from Cu Chi to Pleiku. Whether with a bar of soap or a can of milk, the "Helping Hand" of the 25th Infantry Division has revived the faith and hope for a better life in entire communities of Vietnam.

Headquarters 25th Infantry Division

Behind the story of the 25th Infantry Division are thousands of equally colorful episodes of heroic deeds and acts of courage covering the wide spectrum of individual unit actions within the Division itself. News stories written from the scene of battle . . . in World War II, Korea and now Vietnam . . . refer not only to the triumphs and successes of the "Tropic Lightning" but also depict activities and military achievements of units like the "Wolfhounds," "The Clan" and the "Cacti." Today, more than 100 company or battery sized units combine their skills and energies to put the 25th Infantry Division on the front line, "Ready to Strike . . . Anywhere! Anytime!"

1st Brigade

Elements of the 1st Brigade include the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry "Golden Dragons," 4th Battalion, 9th Infantry "Manchu" and 4th Battalion, 23rd Infantry "Tomahawks."

Fresh from intensive training in Alaska, the "Manchus" and the "Tomahawks" hooked up with the "Golden Dragons" at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, in February in preparation for the Brigade's deployment to Vietnam.

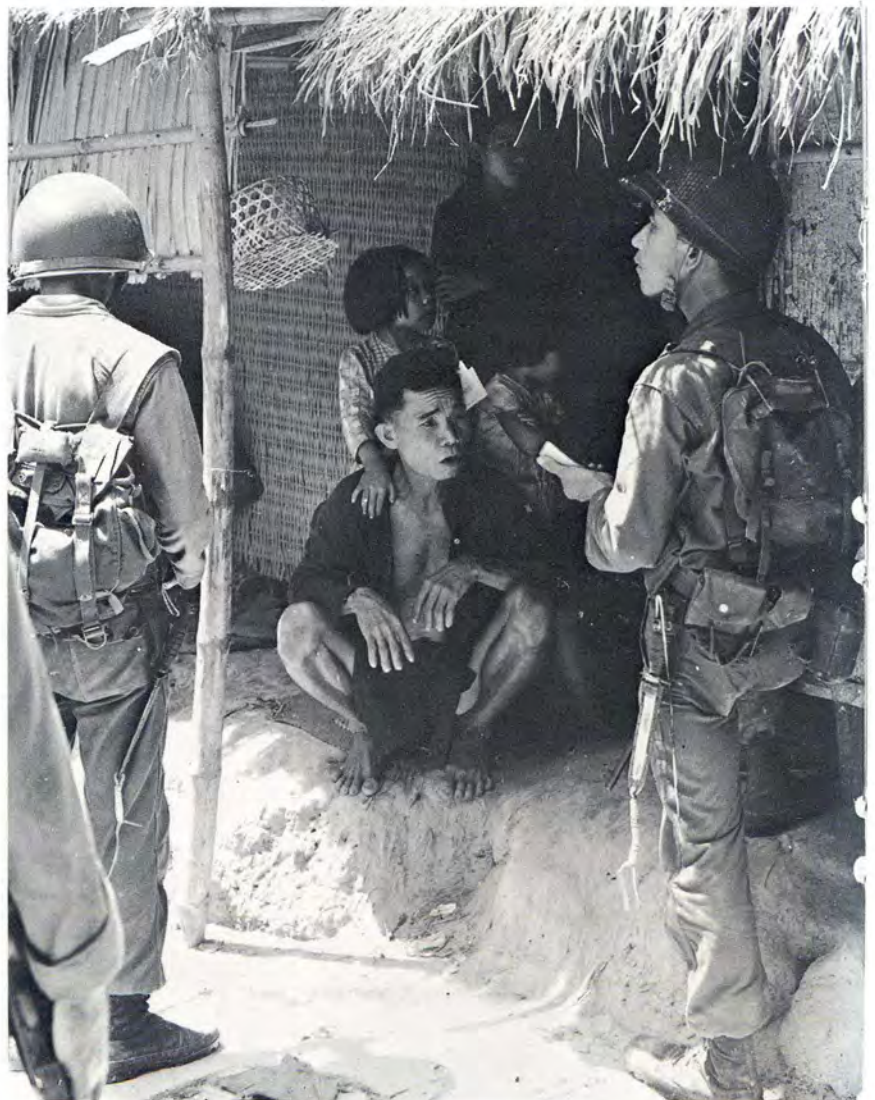

On April 15, 1966, the combined elements of the 1st Brigade bid their farewell to the Aloha state and boarded the USNS General Walker on their way to Vietnam.

Within the first weeks of their arrival in-country, soldiers of the 1st Brigade were settled at Cu Chi and ready to put their best foot forward to live up to the traditions of the famed "Tropic Lightning" Division.

2nd Battalion
14th Infantry

Following nine weeks of stepped-up jungle and guerrilla warfare training at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, the "Battle Dragons" of 14th Infantry fame embarked on their voyage to the war in Vietnam.

On April 29 initial elements of the "Battle Dragons" stormed the pebblestrewn beaches of Vung Tau, Vietnam. By nightfall of April 30 all the elements of the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, were setting up base camp at Cu Chi, Vietnam.

Defense of Outpost "Ann Margret," several bunkers a thousand meters in front of the main bunker line, was undertaken and ambush patrols immediately began to go out nightly to meet and engage the Viet Cong skirting the base camp perimeter.

Operations "Akron," "Wahiawa," "Fort Smith" and "Moku-leia" gained valuable experience in the early months for future "Battle Dragon" suppression of the enemy.

The 14th Infantry traces its history from the time President Abraham Lincoln ordered an increase of the Regular Army early in the Civil War in 1861.

Members of the 14th have served from Antietam in the Civil War to Manila in the Spanish-American War, the Rhineland in World War II and near the 38th parallel in the Korean War.

It was a member of the 14th, trumpeter Calvin P. Titus, who was the first volunteer to scale the Peking Wall in the Boxer Rebellion and who was later awarded the Medal of Honor.

In January 1945, the 14th sailed for France to fight in World War II as part of the 71st Division. After the war, the 14th moved to Germany for occupation duty until 1951, when it was called to action with the 25th Division and fought for two years in Korea. The 14th moved to Schofield in 1954 in a training status.

The 14th Infantry supports a leper hospital eight miles south of Khonkaen, Thailand, run by the Christian and Missionary Alliance.

The hospital has grown with the "Golden Dragons" support from a one-room wooden structure into a modern cinder block building with operating rooms and wards.

4th Battalion
9th Infantry

During the early part of December 1965, the 4th Battalion, 9th Infantry, was in Alaska preparing for its annual winter maneuver to be conducted in January 1966 in temperatures of 50 below zero.

In the midst of these low temperatures some "hot news" kindled the interior of Alaska: The "Manchu" was being assigned to the famed jungle-trained "Tropic Lightning" Division in Hawaii. The battalion of combat infantrymen arrived in the 50th State January 30, 1966, from the 49th State. Eight weeks of arduous jungle training in a tropical environment readied the battalion for its deployment to Vietnam.

April 29 saw the battalion disembark the ship General Walker at Vung Tau, Vietnam. Within a few days, the "Manchus" were at Cu Chi to take their place alongside other elements of the "Tropic Lightning" Division . . . in combat.

Notable battalion-sized operations conducted by the "Manchu" include "Asheville," "Wahi-awa," "Joliet I and II," "Heleman" and "Kahana I and II."

The 4th Battalion, 9th Infantry, on duty with the 172nd Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) at Fort Wainwright, Alaska, since 1957, has its roots in a well-known "Tropic Lightning" fighting unit. The 9th Infantry traces its history to 1955 when it was established at Fort Monroe, Va. The 27th Infantry "Wolfhounds" adopted the name 9th Infantry when it joined that regiment in 1869. The combined unit was called the 9th Infantry (the present "Wolfhound" organization was not recalled to active duty until 1901). The battalion has earned extensive battle credits in military campaigns spanning more than 100 years, including the Civil War, Philippine Insurrection, World Wars I and II and the Korean War. Additionally, the 9th Infantry participated in the China Relief Expedition (Boxer Rebellion) of 1900. The 4th Battalion, 9th Infantry is the first "Manchu" battalion deployed to Southeast Asia since World War II.

4th Battalion
23rd Infantry

Engaging in squad tactics, machine gun firing, mortar training and initial briefings on counterinsurgency operations, men of the 4th Battalion, 23rd Infantry, sweated through their attempts to come to grips with the drastic change in climate at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

Arriving in Hawaii on January 30, 1966, from Fort Richardson, Alaska, the men of the 23rd, along with the 4th Battalion, 9th Infantry, filled the gap left when plans to organize the 4th and 5th Battalions, 21st Infantry, were scrapped by the 25th Infantry Division.

The "Tomahawks" departed Hawaii on April 16 and within a few short weeks were busily engaging the Viet Cong from their Cu Chi encampment.

Boasting of being trained to be Viet Cong killers, the 23rd proved they could accomplish that mission through Operations "Akron," "Wahiawa," "Makiki" and "Ehu."

The 23rd is credited with scoring the 25th Infantry Division's 1000th Viet Cong killed during a July operation.

The "Tomahawks," as the "Manchu," also have their roots in a well-known "Tropic Lightning" fighting unit.

The 23rd Infantry began its history in 1861 as 1st Battalion, 14th Infantry, but became the second battalion the following year, as the forerunner of today's "Golden Dragons." In 1866, the unit was given its current designation of 23rd Infantry.

The 23rd's battle credits include the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, Philippine Insurrection, World Wars I and II and the Korean War.

2nd Brigade

No outfit in Vietnam ever faced a tougher test than the 2nd Brigade of the 25th Infantry Division. "The Battle for Cu Chi" belongs to them for it was the "Wolfhounds" and the "Bobcats," supported by the "Automatic Eighth," who first arrived on "Hell's Half Acre," the place where soldiers became heroes overnight because of the fierce fighting which broke out before the Division's base camp was finally carved out of Viet Cong tunnel-infested territory.

When the history of the war in Vietnam passes from this generation to the next, there will be tales of courage and triumph . . . Date line: Cu Chi . . . Subject: The 2nd Brigade, 25th Infantry Division . . .

1st Battalion (Mech)
5th Infantry

When the 1st Battalion (Mechanized), 5th Infantry, arrived at the Cu Chi base camp, they found a large open field about three kilometers square. It was hot and dusty with sparse, dry vegetation. Ringing the field were rubber tree groves, bamboo hedgerows, patches of woods and thicket and an occasional rice paddy. To the north, in front of the position assigned to the "Bobcats," lies the Phu Hoa Dong Plantation, gateway to the HoBo Woods.

During the first days after the arrival of the 5th Mech, several hundred tunnels were discovered, searched, cleared and destroyed by the "Bobcat" "tunnel runners." After 48 hours of occupation at the Cu Chi complex, the 5th Mech was involved in the "Battle for Cu Chi."

More room was needed for laying the foundation for a base camp, and Operation "Bobcat Track" began with the mechanized unit determined to take it away from "Charlie." For four days, the "Bobcats" moved with the "Wolfhounds" slowly forward through constant, harassing sniper fire, well established mine fields, and over tunnels and trenches. It was a determined enemy that met the armored personnel carriers and allowed the 5th Infantry to overrun their concealed positions.

Within a few days the "Bobcats" had fought, sweated and paid the price to reach the perimeters that are now used as the permanent base camp defense.

The 5th Infantry is the third oldest regiment in the United States Army, descending from a unit constituted April 12, 1808. During more than a century and a half, the 5th Infantry has served in Canada, Mexico, Cuba, the Philippines, Germany and Korea.

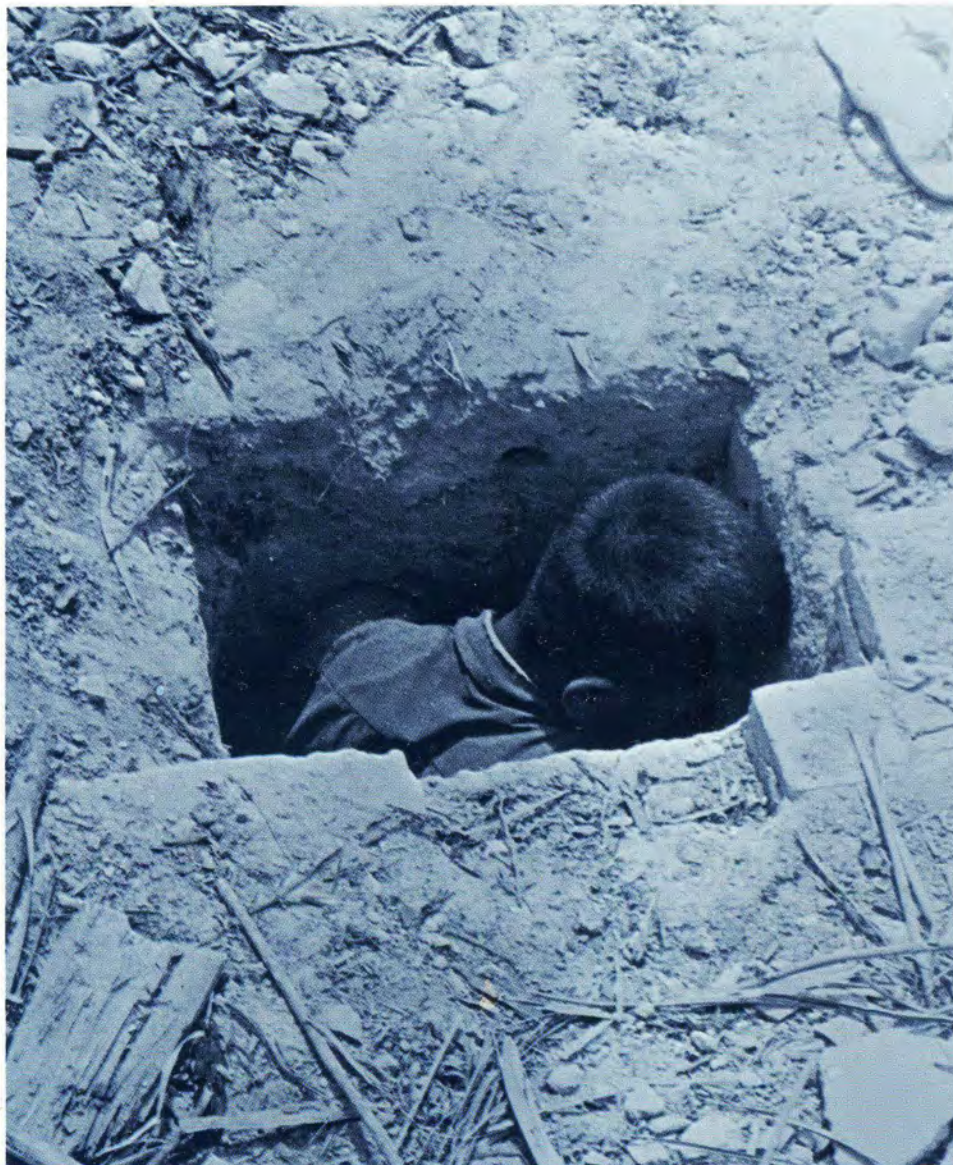

From 1857's expedition against the Seminole Indians in Florida until 1894 when it assembled at Fort McPherson, Georgia, to protect the mails and maintain order during labor troubles, the 5th fought and protected the frontiers during the westward expansion period.

In 1898, the 5th served in the occupation of Cuba and took part in the Philippine Insurrection during 1900 and 1901, and later was ordered to guard the Panama Canal during World War I.

In World War II the regiment was assigned to the 71st Infantry Division. It crossed the Rhine River and participated in the destruction of the 6th SS Division.

The 5th Infantry, attached to the 25th Infantry, 3rd Infantry, 24th Infantry, 1st Cavalry, 40th Infantry and 45th Infantry Divisions, as well as IX Corps, at different times throughout the war, participated in all ten campaigns of the Korean War.

Returning to Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, the 1st Battalion (Mechanized), 5th Infantry, with M-113 armored personnel carriers, became one of the fastest moving outfits of the "Tropic Lightning" Division.

1st Battalion
27th Infantry

Prior to the arrival of the 27th Infantry "Wolfhounds" in Vietnam, the Viet Cong had totally dominated the Cu Chi District, the future dwelling place for "Tropic Lightning" Division Headquarters.

As late as August 1965, Viet Cong units staged victory parades down Highway 1 through the center of Tan An Hoi. The Catholic Church in the hamlet of Bac Ha, closest settlement to the proposed base camp of the 2nd Brigade, was used twice weekly for Viet Cong meetings before 25th Infantry Division elements arrived.

The 1st and 2nd Battalions, 27th Infantry "Wolfhounds," waded ashore on January 18, 1966, and were assigned the immediate task of pioneering the new 25th Division homeland. The Viet Cong fought from the mass of tunnels honeycombing the Cu Chi complex, from the trees flanking the perimeter, and from nearby water supply points.

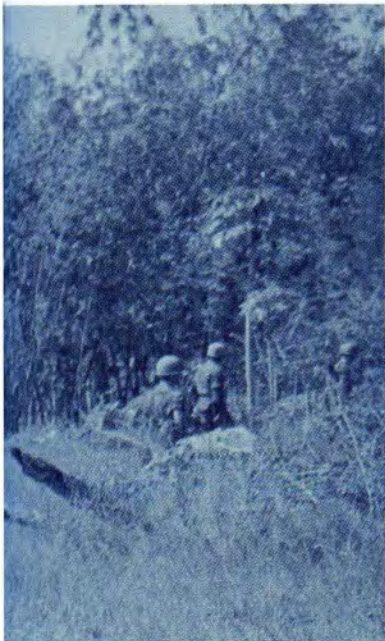

The Viet Cong, having controlled the land for many years, were stubborn in yielding an inch of territory. The "Wolfhounds" turned their superior firepower to bear upon the insurgents and forced the VC to retreat in the "Battle for Cu Chi."

Prior to the remainder of the 25th Division's arrival in-country, the "Wolfhounds" had conducted 13 separate operations in the Cu Chi area during the months of January, February and March to establish a "Tropic Lightning" stronghold.

2nd Battalion
27th Infantry

The 27th Infantry "Wolfhounds," one of the Army's fightingest infantry organizations, was organized in 1901.

Its canine nickname was added late in World War I, when the White Russians likened the unit's fighting ferocity to that of a wolfhound. The unit's first mascot, a Russian wolfhound, was named Kolchak for the admiral who had commanded the White Russians.

On December 7, 1941, the "Wolfhounds" fired the first shots at the Japanese during the bombing of Pearl Harbor.

The 27th has been part of the 25th Division since October 1941.

The unit fought at Guadalcanal, the Northern Solomons, New Georgia and Kolombangara before it was pulled out of action for a rest in New Zealand and New Caledonia.

Back in action in the Philippines, the "Wolfhounds" participated in nine major battles before they moved to Camp Sakai on the outskirts of Osaka, Japan.

There Master Sergeant Hugh O'Reilly visited the Osaka Orphanage at Christmas 1949, found the children in need of financial assistance, and returned to begin monthly collections which have continued through the present time.

The "Wolfhounds" earned the first Distinguished Unit Citation of the Korean Conflict for their actions at Sangyong-Ni, where they inflicted more than 3,000 casualties on the enemy in one fierce four-day period.

They participated in the defense of Taegu, fought at the Nam River and Chinju, met the Chinese Communists when they crossed the Yalu River and were the last American troops to withdraw across the Han River after Seoul had fallen. When the spring offensive began, the "Wolfhounds" were the first to cross the Han River, and when delegations to discuss a truce were formed, the unit was chosen to serve as an honor guard.

Recognition for the heroism of the 27th in Korea came also from the Republic of Korea which awarded its Presidential Unit Citation to the regiment four times.

In all the 27th participated in ten campaigns in Korea from start to finish, then remained on the battered peninsula until 1954 when, with the rest of the 25th Infantry Division, it returned to Schofield Barracks.

With the reorganization of the 25th Infantry Division under the new Army ROAD organization, the 1st and 2nd Battalion of the "Wolfhounds" were assigned to the 25th Division where they are now a part of the 2nd Brigade.

Within minutes after target data is collected on enemy positions, the sounds of artillery stir the air over the 25th Infantry Division's base camp at Cu Chi, and in areas where artillery units from the 25th Infantry Division Artillery are operating.

The quick response and earth-shattering firepower of the Division's artillery serve not only to keep the enemy off balance but also deprive him of vital supply routes and levy many casualties on him.

In addition to providing combat support to military operations of the Division in Vietnam, the 25th Division Artillery also plays an active role in "the other war," bringing the hope for a better way of life closer to the homes of the villagers of Vietnam.

Division Artillery

1st Battalion, 8th Artillery

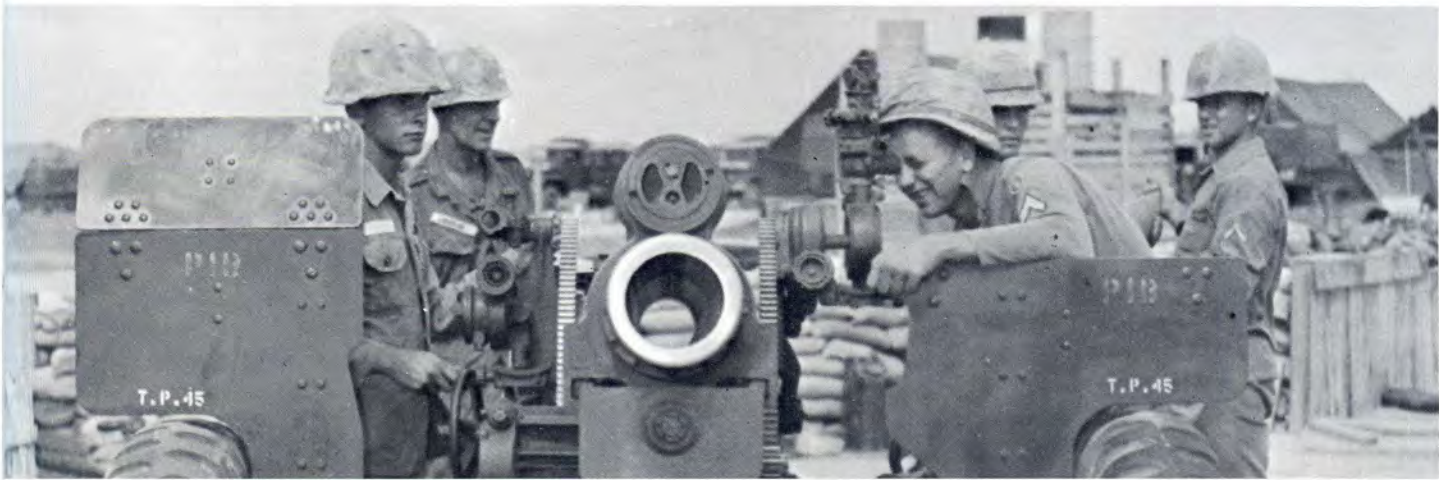

The 1st Battalion, 8th Artillery, was alerted for movement to Southeast Asia in mid-December 1965. After two weeks of intensive preparation, the battalion sailed as part of the 2nd Brigade Task Force on January 5, 1966.

On January 23, 1966, C Battery fired the "Automatic Eighth's" first round in anger from a position near Bien Hoa in support of Republic of Vietnam forces operating in War Zone D.

The following day lead elements of the 2nd Brigade Task Force moved by convoy to the Cu Chi area. There the 1st Battalion, 8th Artillery, supported clearing operations for the base camp area with accurate close-in fires.

During the first six months of combat in Vietnam, the 8th Artillery supported elements of the 2nd Brigade Task Force on 16 major operations. The 100,000th round was fired against the Viet Cong on July 31, 1966.

From Fort Bliss, Tex., where it was first organized in 1916, to the Philippines and Korea, and back to Hawaii, the 1st Battalion, 8th Artillery, has always adhered to its motto of "Daring and Tenacious." In World War I it fought through the hedgerows of France with the 7th Infantry Division in 1917, and in World War II through the island-hopping campaigns of the South Pacific, as part of the 25th Infantry Division.

As part of the 27th Regimental Combat Team, the 8th Artillery saw its first action in Korea July 24, 1950, between Taejon and Taegu, deep in South Korea.

At Chindong-ni, on the southern coast of the peninsula, the "Automatic Eighth" fought for ten days and earned the Republic of Korea Presidential Unit Citation.

In the "Bowling Alley", the "Automatic Eighth" helped maul some 3,000 North Koreans and with the rest of the "Fire Brigade" earned an Oak Leaf Cluster to its Distinguished Unit Citation.

In the 1,112 days since July 11, 1950, the "Automatic Eighth" had fired nearly half a million rounds of 105mm ammunition. On October 6, the men headed for Honolulu with the 25th Division Artillery, ending a 50-month Period of duty in Korea.

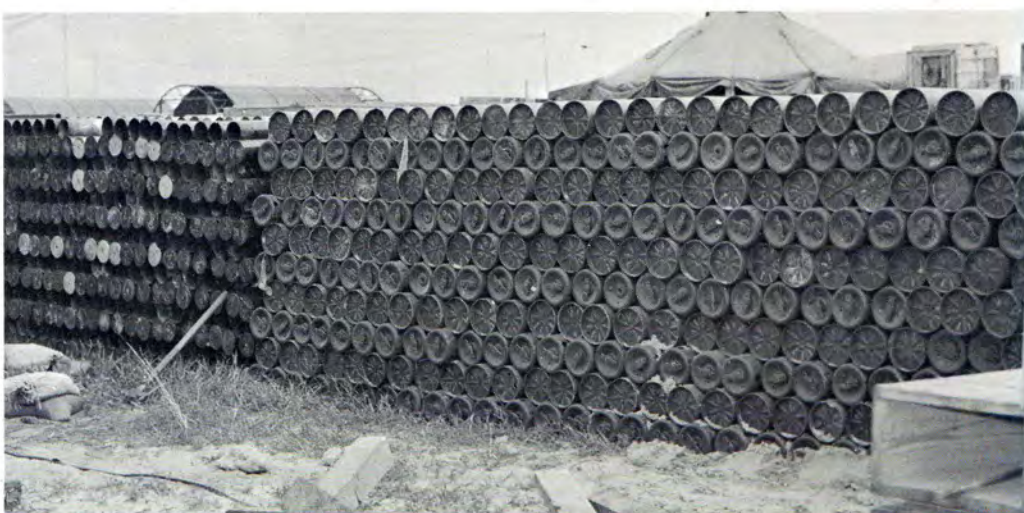

7th Battalion 11th Artillery

The "On Time" Battalion arrived at the 25th Infantry Division's base camp at Cu Chi, April 30, 1966. Within 72 hours of their arrival the 7th Battalion, 11th Artillery, became operational when Colonel Daniel B. Williams, Division Artillery commander, pulled the lanyard on an A Battery howitzer.

Operation "Wahiawa," a brigade-sized search and destroy mission in the HoBo Woods, was the first major operation for the 11th Artillery. A decisive victory for the brigade was notched over the Viet Cong, with the majority of enemy casualties credited to the saturating fire of the "On Time" Battalion.

The 11th Artillery has offered direct support to 1st Brigade on Operations "Akron," "Asheville," "Fort Smith," "Makiki," "Hawk," "Joliet," "Fargo," "Heleman" and "Ehu."

During an operation in the Vo Dat - Xuan Loc area, the battalion belled its 40,000th round against the insurgent force since arriving in Vietnam.

The 11th Field Artillery dates back to 1917, at Camp Harry J. Jones, Douglas, Ariz., with the transfer of 200 men from the 6th Field Artillery. During World War I they served in the 6th Division. Their original armament was 4.7-inch horse-drawn howitzers.

On November 1918, "Calamity Jane," the Number 2 piece of E Battery, fired the last shot of World War I.

On December 7, 1941, the battalion manned its field positions after the attack on Oahu. July 1943 found the "On Time" Battalion embarked for Australia. With the knowledge acquired through jungle training in Australia, they were sent to Dutch New Guinea. From here to Leyte Island in the Philippines and later to Lapaz, Luzon, and Parang Harbor on the Island of Mindanao, the mission of the 11th Artillery was to support the advance of the 34th Infantry Regiment toward Legos.

During July 1950, the battalion was alerted for immediate deployment to Korea. Returning from Korea, the 11th was assigned to the "Tropic Lightning" Division at Schofield Barracks, April 1, 1960.

3rd Battalion, 13th Artillery

With three 155mm howitzer batteries and one 8-inch howitzer battery, the 3rd Battalion, 13th Artillery, a general support unit, has the heaviest firepower of any battalion in the 25th Division Artillery.

B Battery propelled the "Clan's" first in-country round on April 4, 1966. Ten days later the 13th Artillery reinforced the fires of the direct support battalions on Operation "Kaena" and "Mahala" near Trung Lap.

The "Clan's" 10,000th round was recorded May 16 on Operation "Wahiawa." A total of 4,241 rounds were expended in support of the two brigade operation.

The 13th also supported Operations "Fast Draw," "Lihue," "Makiki," "Santa Fe," "Fresno," "Fireball I" and "Coco Palms."

A direct descendent of C Battery, 3rd Battalion, 13th Field Artillery, the "Clan" was organized June 1, 1917, at Camp Stewart, El Paso, Tex. The "Clan" moved as a battery of horse drawn 4.7-inch howitzers to join the 4th Infantry Division at Camp Greene, Charlotte, N.C., on December 10, 1917.

The 13th Field Artillery Regiment participated in five major campaigns of World War I and in the occupation of Germany following the Armistice. The regiment, which is now the 3rd Battalion, 13th Artillery, arrived at Schofield Barracks in October 1920, to spend 21 peacetime years in Hawaii.

C Battery, 13th Field Artillery Battalion, was assigned to the 24th Infantry Division in 1941 and participated with that division in four major campaigns in World War II and in the occupation of Japan for five years after the war.

The Korean War found the unit in combat again. In 1957 the battalion was redesignated 3rd Howitzer Battalion, 13th Artillery, at Schofield Barracks. It assumed its present designation in August 1963 under the ROAD concept.

Support Command

The Support Command of the 25th Infantry Division, organized on October 12, 1963, has the primary mission of providing Division-level supply, field maintenance, medical services and miscellaneous services for all elements of the Division assigned or attached. Although many smaller elements of the command were deployed to Vietnam along with the line outfits of the Division to assist in support of military operations in the Cu Chi and Pleiku area earlier this year, the main body of Support Command arrived in-country during mid-April.

Subordinate units of Support Command include Headquarters and Headquarters Company and Band, 25th Administration Company, 25th Supply and Transportation Battalion, 25th Medical Battalion and 725th Maintenance Battalion. Infantrymen of the "Tropic Lightning" have quickly learned the importance of support units and the role these units play in military operations in Vietnam.

25th Medical Battalion

The history of the 25th Medical Battalion is as colorful and glorious as that of the 25th Infantry Division. From the days of Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, through World War II, Korea and now Vietnam, the 25th Medical Battalion has lived up to its motto, "Medical Excellence." Main elements of the battalion arrived in-country March 31, 1966, became operational with a clearing station and later with a Division Dental Clinic. The new hospital opened May 12, equipped with an X-ray and operating room. The battalion now boasts of a staff of highly trained Medical, Dental and Medical Service Corps officers and enlisted personnel, capable of providing the utmost in medical and dental care. The battalion has supported Operations "Wahiawa," "Makiki," "Santa Fe" and "Fresno."

The 25th Medical Battalion was activated on October 1, 1941, at Schofield Barracks and joined the Division on December 23, 1942, on Guadalcanal. January 11, 1944, was a very significant date for the Medical Battalion when they landed on Luzon and continued their support of the Division to a record of 165 days of continuous medical support in combat. The battalion participated in all ten campaigns of the Korean War and was awarded the Republic of Korea Presidential Unit Citation when all Division units were used as combat troops in a successful effort to block the Red assault on the port city of Pusan.

25th Supply and Transportation Battalion

The 25th Supply and Transportation Battalion is concerned primarily with supplying rations and transportation to the "Tropic Lightning" Division.

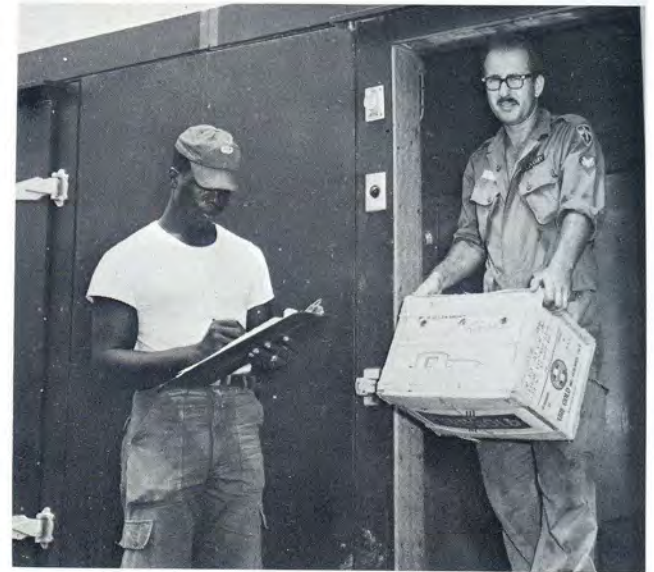

Supply and Transportation furnishes field bathing facilities and limited aerial resupply using Division aircraft. The motor transport company transports supplies and assists in troop movements.

Because of its transportation mission, the battalion was the first in the Division to receive M35A1 multi-fuel trucks.

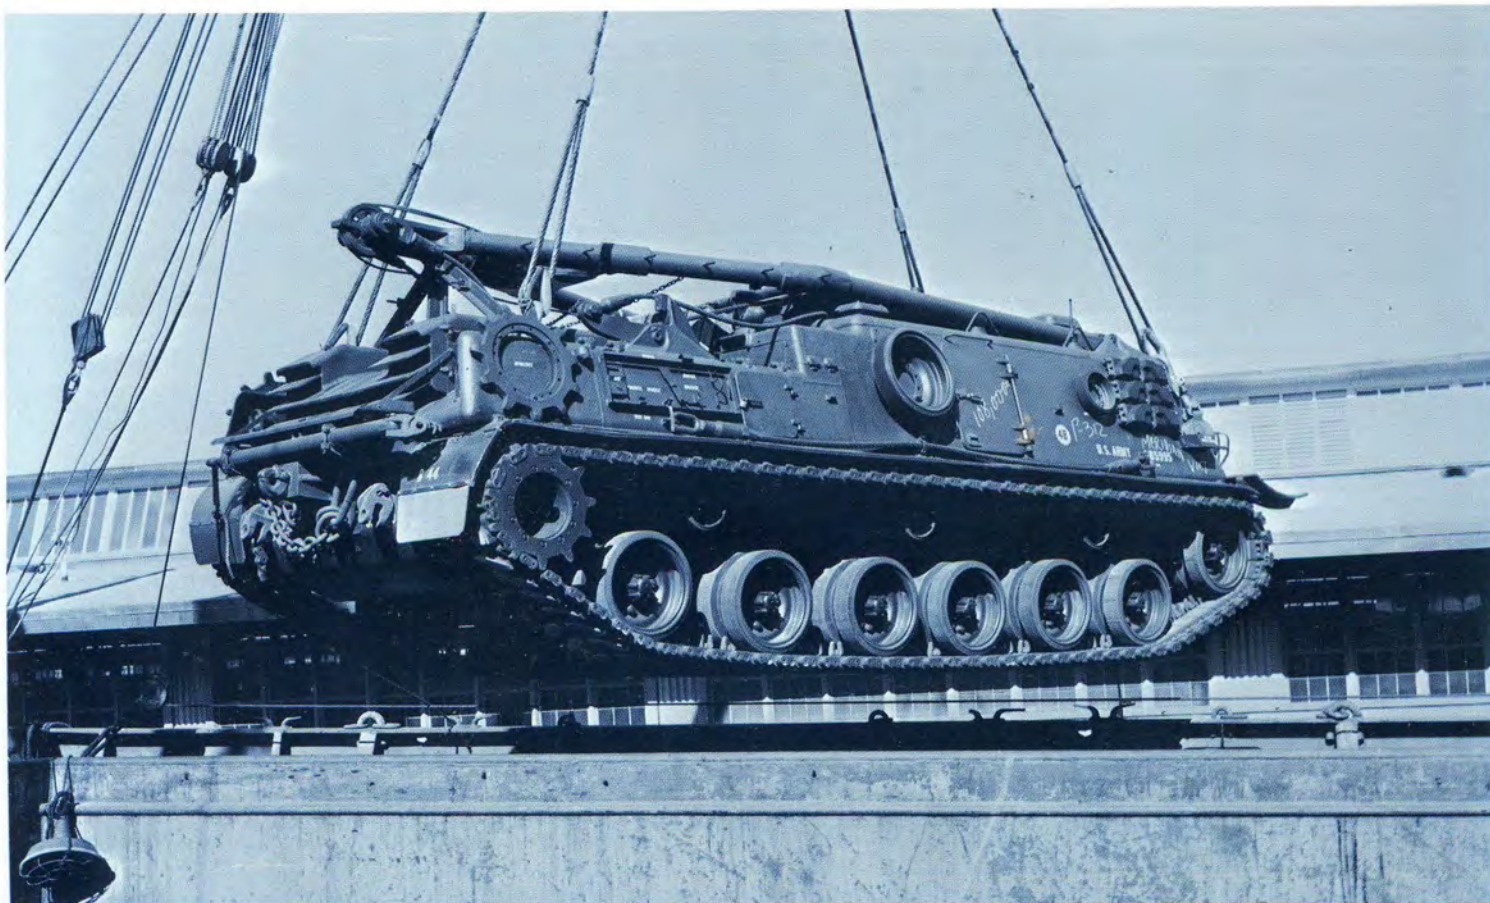

The Division Supply Office handles requisitions for all technical services through its quartermaster, ordnance, engineer, signal, transportation, chemical and food service sections.

The 25th Supply and Transport Battalion was organized July 1, 1963, when the entire 25th Infantry Division underwent reorganization under the ROAD concept. Originally, the men and material came from the 25th Quartermaster Company and the 33rd Transportation Battalion.

725th Maintenance Battalion

One-Stop service to the customer is the goal of the 725th Maintenance Battalion. Its mission is to see that equipment—from rifles to tanks and aircraft—is operational at all times. During combat operations, a direct support company travels with each of the Division's brigades. These companies are 100 per cent mobile and carry a 30-day load of "fast moving" supplies.

The "Service to the Line" Battalion was activated October 1, 1941, in Hawaii.

During World War II the battalion was awarded four campaign streamers and was presented the Presidential Unit Citation Streamer.

Redesignated a Regular Army unit, June 1949, the Battalion entered the Korean War and was awarded 10 campaign streamers and two Republic of Korea Presidential Unit Citations.

25th Administration Company

Perhaps one of the most unheralded of any combat unit in Vietnam is the 25th Administration Company. It is a unit which remains obscure, while others receive acclamations for deeds performed in combat while actively engaged with the enemy.

The 25th Administration Company arrived in-country the second week in March, established its base camp and set out to provide the necessary personnel and administrative support to sustain the 25th Infantry Division.

The company provides a military pay branch, personnel records branch, management branch, actions branch, machine branch, adjutant general, inspector general, staff judge advocate, finance, chaplain, information, postal, special services and classified sections.

The 25th Administration Company was organized October 12, 1943. It has seven battle streamers earned from World War II and the Korean War.

Separate Units

Working alongside combat and support elements assigned to the five major commands within the 25th Infantry Division are separate units who by the nature of their various missions round out the complex functions and capabilities of a combat division.

Among those serving the "Tropic Lightning" Division are the 3rd Squadron, 4th Cavalry; 65th Engineers; 25th Aviation Battalion; 25th Military Police Company; 125th Signal Battalion; Headquarters and Headquarters Company; 25th Military Intelligence Detachment; 16th Radio Research Unit; 2nd Battalion, 32nd Artillery; 588th Engineer Battalion; 7th Surgical Hospital; 9th Chemical Detachment; 18th Military Historical Detachment, and the 14th and 15th Public Information Detachments.

The names of each individual unit imply only a portion of the important contribution they make in the mission of the "Tropic Lightning" Division.

3rd Squadron
4th Cavalry

When the 4th U.S. Cavalry, whose 3rd Squadron is one of the fastest moving units in the 25th Infantry Division, was organized as the 1st Cavalry Regiment at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., Mar 3, 1855, the horse was the ultimate in mobility and troopers were armed with sabers and pistols.

Today's "4th Cav" lacks horses but has mobility and firepower undreamed of by such original members of the unit as Lieutenant Colonel Joseph E. Johnston, Captain George B. McClellan, Second Lieutenant Jeb Stuart, or even the regiment's second commander, Colonel Robert E. Lee.

A recent addition to the 3rd Squadron is its airmobile troop, responsible for performing recon security, scout work and eagle flights.

Main elements of the Cav arrived in-country March 23, 1966, and have participated in all Division operations. Attached to the Squadron's colors are 56 campaign streamers earned by the 3rd Squadron. They start with the Indian Wars in Kansas in 1857-60, carry through 20 campaigns of the Civil War, eight Indian Wars, 10 campaigns in the Philippines, eight major campaigns of World War II from Normandy through Central Europe, and 10 campaigns in Korea.

Army statisticians have had occasion to raise their eyebrows when looking over the record of the 4th Cavalry, especially the roster of Medal of Honor recipients. This is the outfit in which 26 men received 27 medals of Honor. Then there is Colonel Ronald Slidell MacKenzie who commanded the unit for 12 years beginning in 1870, familiar to viewers of television as the leader of "MacKenzie's Raiders."

On the wall of the squadron's headquarters is a framed statement, undoubtedly uttered by a cavalryman, to the effect that "the roll of the Cavalry in war is to lend tone to what would otherwise be a vulgar brawl."

65th Engineers

The 65th Engineer Battalion had the distinction of sending the first complete unit of the 25th Infantry Division to Vietnam when C Company departed Hawaii August 22, 1965, to assist with the development of Cam Ranh Bay Logistics Area.

Less than seven months later the remainder of the Battalion arrived in-country, providing effective engineer support to the hard-hitting 25th Infantry Division.

During the initial days at Cu Chi the weather was the biggest obstacle; rain and muddy ground hampered the work of the bulldozers, while hot, humid temperatures impeded the efforts of the men. Yet, the work was completed with a minimum loss of time and working effort.

The usual engineer combat tasks awaited the battalion after it completed the preliminary base camp work: road maintenance, airstrip construction, and bridge and culvert construction.

Line companies of the battalion are deployed to serve as supporting elements for infantry units during Division operations.

On October 1, 1941, barely nine weeks before the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor, the battalion was activated at Schofield Barracks as a component of the 25th Infantry Division. During World War II, the 65th Engineer Battalion served with distinction in the Pacific as a member of the 25th Infantry Division, earning campaign streamers in the Central Pacific, Guadalcanal, Northern Solomons and Luzon campaigns. The battalion was deployed from Japan to Korea in July 1950. On numerous occasions, the Engineers were committed in their secondary role—that of infantry—and earned campaign streamers for the UN defensive, UN offensive, CCF intervention, First UN Counter-offensive, CCF Spring Offensive, UN Summer-Fall Offensive, Second Korean Winter, Korea, Summer-Fall, 1952, Third Korean Winter and Korea, Summer 1953.

25th Aviation Battalion

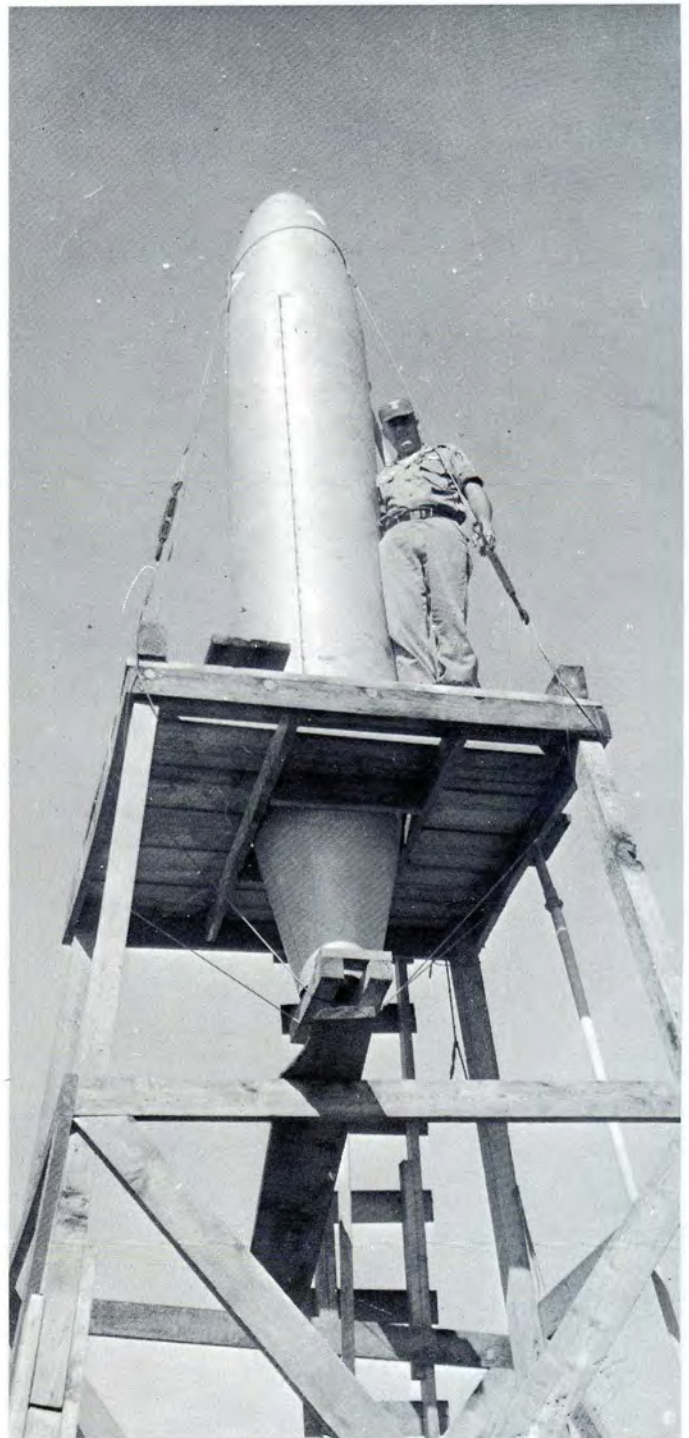

Main elements of the 25th Aviation Battalion arrived at Cu Chi on April 2, 1966, and were ready to perform aviation missions immediately upon arrival.

Within hours UH-1D helicopters supported by UH-1B gunships were airlifting 25th Infantry troops from the dusty Cu Chi airfield into combat areas in support of operations.

April through July saw aviation elements of the battalion fly more than 100 combat missions in support of Division tactical units.

The battalion maintains unique flexibility with two different types of rotary wing aircraft being assigned. Today the battalion is authorized more than 43 aircraft.

In its short history the battalion has seen a rapid growth, both in numbers and in experience. The 25th Aviation Battalion was created during 1963 as part of the Division reorganization under the ROAD concept. The lineage of the Aviation Battalion goes back to February 1, 1957, when the 25th Infantry Division created the 25th Aviation Company. The company was redesignated August 12, 1963, as the 25th Aviation Battalion. Prior to 1957 each infantry regiment was authorized aircraft, however, no centralized unit was responsible for all aircraft.

25th Military Police Company

The 25th Military Police Company is responsible not only for the jobs with which they are usually associated—security patrols, accident investigation and security of the base camp gates, but also for a variety of combat tasks.

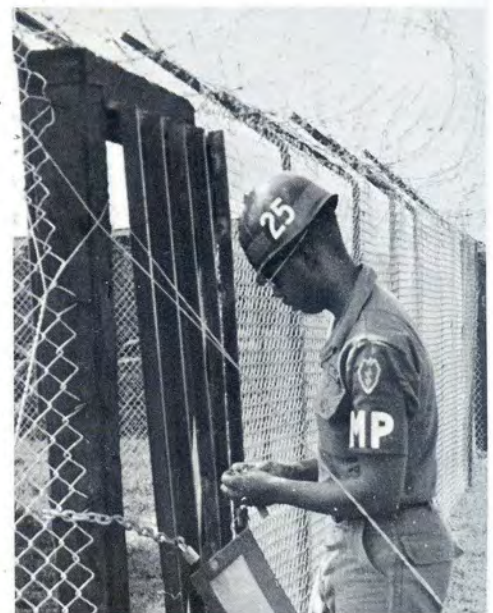

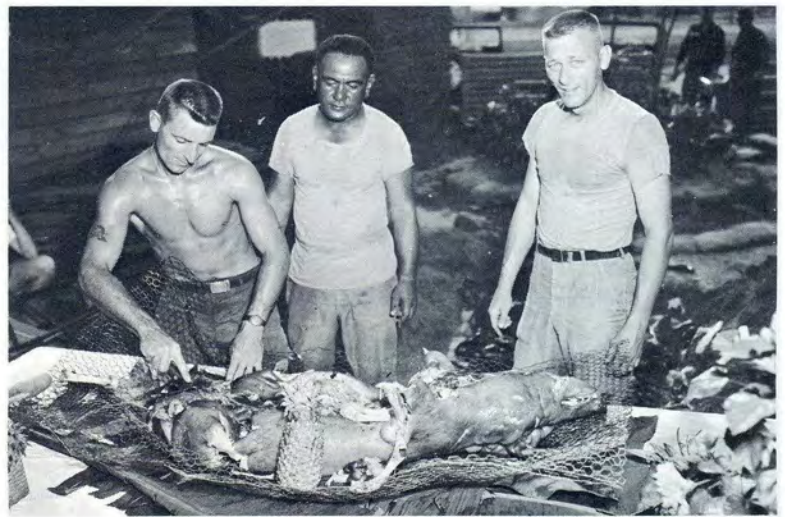

The MPs support the various brigades by providing escorts for convoys departing for the field and then work hand-in-hand with the units themselves, setting up road blocks in villages nearby.

In combat the military policemen provide the general security of the Division command post and maintenance, security and detention of prisoners at the POW collection point.

At the nearby village of Tan An Hoi, the MPs provide security for Division troops and also assist the Vietnamese police who maintain order in the village.

The history of the 25th Military Police Company dates back to 1941. When the Division was activated on October 1, 1941, so, too, was the 25th MP Company, which joined the remainder of the "Tropic Lightning's" forces in combat during World War II. For this combat the 25th MP Company was awarded four campaign participation streamers, in addition to two unit citations. The unit also saw combat during the Korean War, for which it was awarded the ten battle streamers of the campaigns, adding to its combat honors. The company was inactivated in February 1957 and relieved from assignment to the Division. It was during that period—1957 until 1963—that the 25th MP Detachment was a part of the Division.

125th Signal Battalion

The 125th Signal Battalion arrived in-country March 13, 1966, aboard the USNS Walker, trained to perfect signal communications to all echelons of Division headquarters, Support Command and major subordinate units.

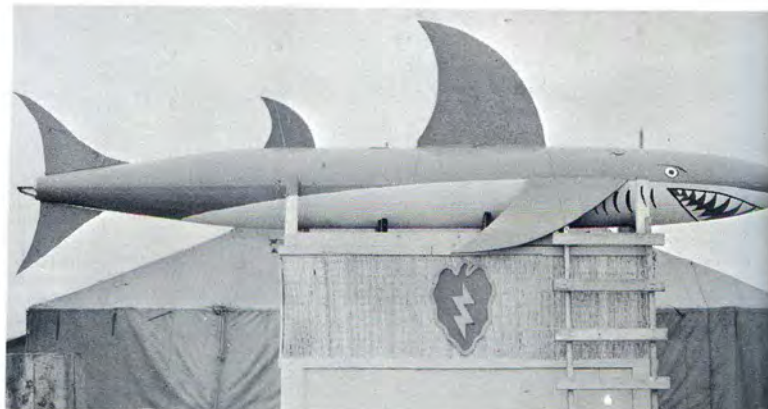

The 25th Signal Company, parent of the 125th Signal Battalion, was constituted as part of the Division on August 26, 1941, landed with the Division on Guadalcanal in 1942 and fought in the Northern Solomons and Luzon from 1943 to 1945. The unit was in Korea with the "Tropic Lightning" Division until 1954, when it returned to Schofield Barracks.

The 125th Signal Battalion has 13 campaign streamers and five unit citation streamers earned for its participation in World War II and the Korean War.

Headquarters and 2nd Headquarters Company

Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 25th Infantry Division, departed the "Aloha State" February 28, 1966, and 12 days later docked at Vung Tau, Vietnam.

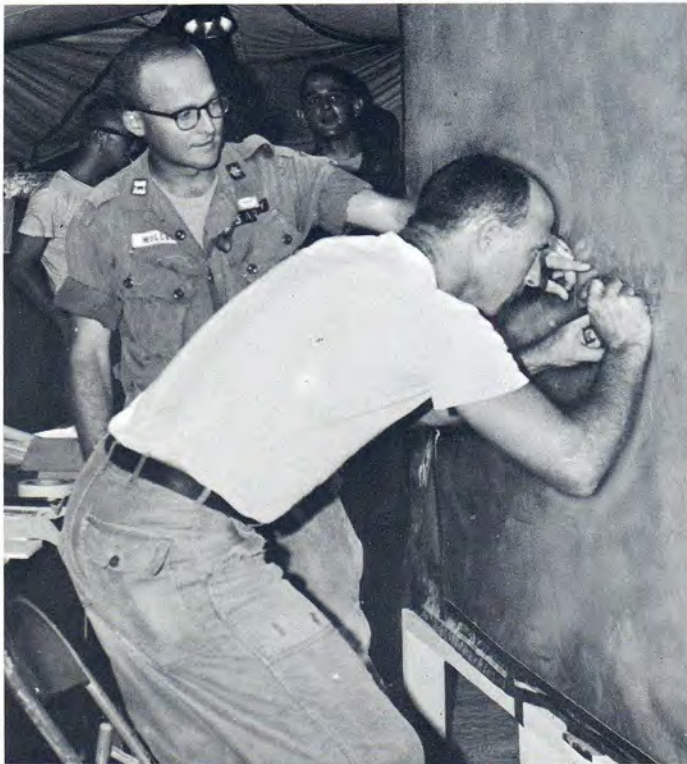

The following day, Headquarters and Headquarters Company was fulfilling the housekeeping requirements of the 25th Infantry Division at Cu Chi—the mission being to provide administrative support for Division Headquarters; the capabilities being to provide administrative, supply, maintenance, mess and medical support for the nucleus of the 25th Infantry Division Headquarters.

Activated on October 1, 1941, in Hawaii as Headquarters, 25th Infantry Division, the unit was reorganized and redesignated April 1, 1960, as Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 25th Infantry Division.

The Company has 17 battle streamers awarded during World War II and the Korean War.

25th Military Intelligence Detachment

The 25th Military Intelligence Detachment arrived in-country March 12, 1966, prepared to perform specialized intelligence and counterintelligence functions in support of the 25th Infantry Division's role in Vietnam.

The 25th MID was with the 25th Infantry Division in Korea and received battle credits for nine campaigns and was awarded the Meritorious Unit Commendation Award.

16th Radio Research Unit

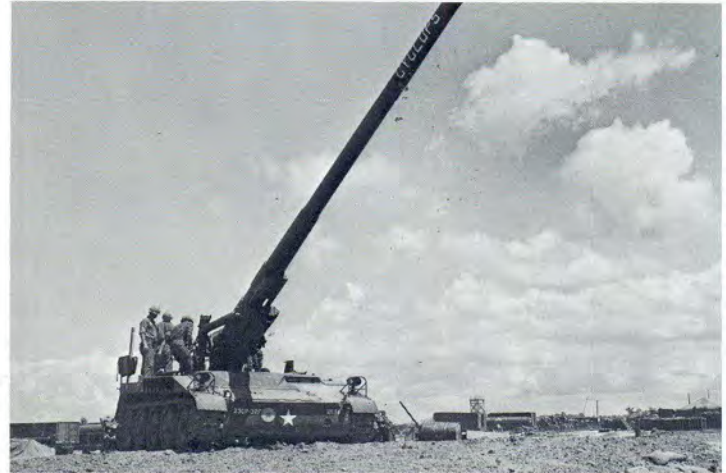

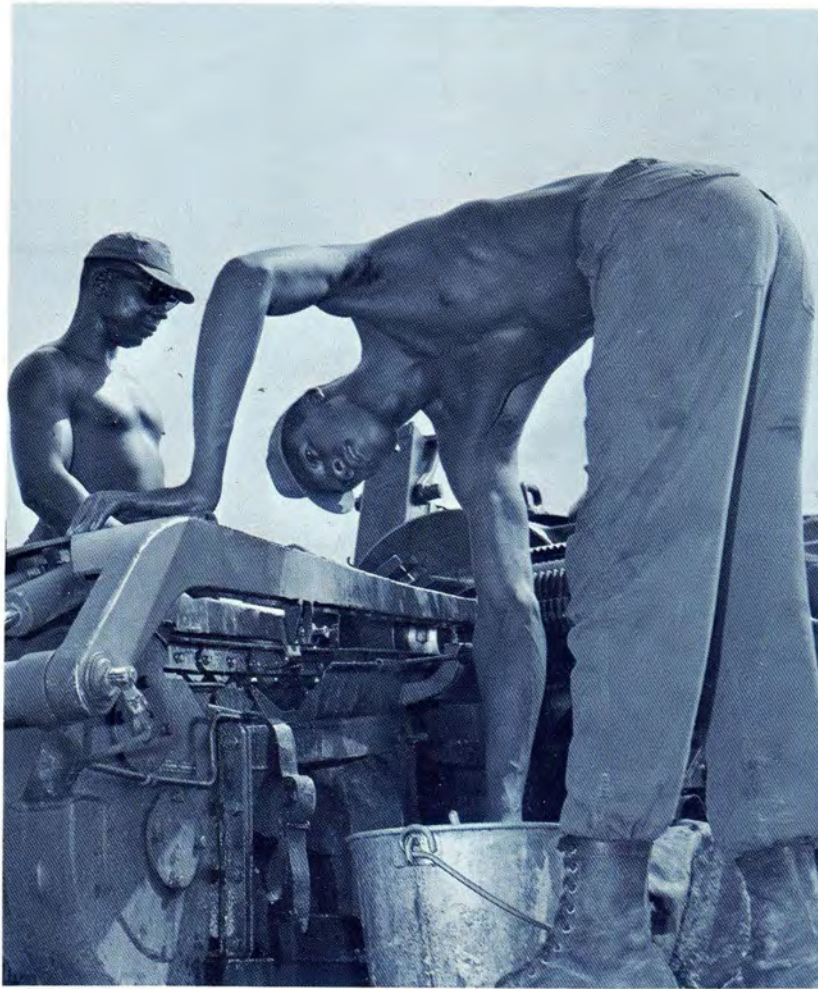

The 16th Radio Research Unit arrived at Cu Chi, Vietnam, March 13, 1966, and immediately became operational.

With an approximate strength of 100 men at the Cu Chi base camp and 25 men attached to the 3rd Brigade Task Force at Pleiku, the 16th Radio Research Unit conducts research and investigation on specific types of radio equipment and provides communication security for all 25th Infantry Division operations.

2nd Battalion 32nd Artillery

July 23, 1965, the 2nd Battalion, 32nd Artillery, at Fort Sill, Okla., was alerted for deployment to Vietnam. The "Proud Americans" arrived in-country on November 4, 1965. From a position near the Bien Hoa Air Base, the first 175mm round in combat was fired November 19. On January 8, 1966, the Battalion moved to Cu Chi, becoming the first heavy artillery west of Saigon. The 2nd Battalion, 32nd Artillery has a long and illustrious history, dating from its first organization on August 5, 1918, as B Battery, 32nd Field Artillery. The 32nd participated in the North African Campaign, Sicilian Campaign and Normandy Invasion, D Day.

3RD BRIGADE TASK FORCE

... serving at Pleiku

On December 11, 1965, the 3rd Brigade of the 25th Infantry Division was alerted for deployment to Vietnam. Within two short weeks, Operation "Blue Light," the largest airlift of men and equipment to a combat zone in military history, was under way. The "Bronco Brigade" set up its home at Pleiku, 250 miles north of Saigon in the central highlands of Vietnam. Fighting outfits of the 3rd Brigade Task Force include the 1st Battalion, 14th Infantry "Golden Dragons," and the 1st and 2nd Battalions, 35th Infantry "Cacti." They are supported by the 2nd Battalion, 9th Artillery "Mighty Ninth."

Serving with the task force at Pleiku are the 1st Battalion, 69th Armor; 3rd Provisional Support Battalion; C Troop, 3rd Squadron, 4th Cavalry, and D Company, 65th Engineers.

The brigade task force has added the "lightning swift attack" of the 25th Infantry Division in one of the key areas in Vietnam, halting and disrupting infiltration of hard core North Vietnamese regulars into the Pleiku area.

1st Battalion
14th Infantry

After weeks of concentrated jungle and guerrilla instruction at Schofield Barracks, the 1st Battalion, 14th Infantry, sailed from the Hawaiian Islands aboard the USNS Walker, January 4, 1966, bound for Southeast Asia.

Twelve days later the "Golden Dragons" docked at Cam Ranh Bay and were airlifted to the New Pleiku Airfield.

The 14th Infantry immediately sprang into action upon their arrival on "The Hill" and set out on Operations "Kamehameha I, II and III," followed by "Taylor," a search and destroy mission.

Operation "Garfield," a search and destroy operation in the Dar Loc area, was the initial encounter with the 32nd North Vietnamese Army Regiment and 966th Army Battalion for the "Bronco" units. This was also the first time that Highway 14 in the Ban Me Thout area was used by military units since the French departed Vietnam. Heavy caches of enemy rice, medical equipment, arms and munitions were confiscated during the operation. The "Golden Dragons" also participated in Operations "Lincoln" and "Paul Revere." The 1st Battalion, 14th Infantry, shares the same heritage of the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, as outlined on page 250.

1st Battalion
35th Infantry

Six weeks of training on Exercises "Mountaineer," "Bloodhound" and "Shakedown" molded men of the "Cacti" into a finely-honed mobile unit, experienced with the difficulties of counterinsurgency warfare.

The exercises were conducted at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, to prepare the 35th Infantry to operate self-sufficiently in the defense of the country they were chosen to defend.

Within months, the "Cacti" jungle fighters of the "Bronco" Brigade were flown into the central highlands of Vietnam and began setting their base camp at Pleiku.

Pleiku, 250 miles north of Saigon, is the site of the Vietnamese 2nd Army Corps and a key bastion of the central highlands.

Just as the "Cacti" alumni fought their way across the mud-strewn islands of the Pacific during World War II, earning four Medals of Honor, so too, the present members of the 1st and 2nd Battalions, 35th Infantry, undertook Operations "Kamehameha I, II and III," "Taylor," "Garfield," "Lincoln," "Longfellow" and "Paul Revere" with a zeal typical of the highest standards of today's fighting man.

On Operation "Paul Revere," a search and destroy mission, the "Cacti" were in the middle of the toughest battles yet fought by men of the "Bronco" Brigade and made a tremendous show of toughness typical of the 3rd Brigade Task Force.

Through the first week in August, "Paul Revere" netted more than 700 Viet Cong killed by body count and the seizure of five 12.7mm anti-aircraft weapons, the first such cache to be claimed by any brigade element.

The 35th Infantry Regiment was organized in Douglas, Ariz., on July 8, 1916, from units of the 11th, 18th and 22nd Infantry Regiments.

The "Cacti" served within Continental United States until September 1920, when they moved to Schofield Barracks.

The unit trained in Hawaii until December 1942, when it joined the remainder of the 25th Infantry Division in actively entering World War II. The 35th landed on Guadalcanal in the first of three convoys from the Division.

During the next two and one-half years, the "Cacti" fought their way across the Pacific and earned four campaign streamers, a Distinguished Unit Citation for their action at Guadalcanal, and a Philippine Presidential Unit Citation Streamer.

2nd Battalion 35th Infantry

After the Korean War, the 35th Infantry Regiment was assigned to Otsu, Japan, for occupation duty from 1945 to 1950.

Within several weeks after the outbreak of hostilities in Korea in 1950, the unit landed in Pusan and was fighting within hours.

The 35th stayed in Korea for 63 months with the Division, earning 10 campaign streamers, a Distinguished Unit Citation, and three Republic of Korea Presidential Unit Citation Streamers. Two members of the "Cacti" were awarded the Medal of Honor for action in Korea.

In the fall of 1953, the 35th Infantry returned to Schofield Barracks after an absence of 13 years.

2nd Battalion
9th Artillery

The 2nd Battalion, 9th Artillery, boasts of one of the most charged up batteries in Vietnam . . . A round of artillery fired by "Charlie" Battery, 9th Artillery, which arrived with the advance party on January 2, 1966, officially brought the 25th Division into the Vietnam war. General William C. Westmoreland, commander of all U. S. forces in Vietnam, pulled the lanyard on the 105mm howitzer that boomed the "Aloha Charlie" round into an unidentified Communist position, putting the 25th in a war situation for the first time since it repulsed a Chinese Communist offensive near Seoul, Korea, on May 30, 1953. Within days after main elements of the "Mighty Ninth" arrived in-country, they were supporting Operation "Kamehameha I," designed to clear and secure Highway 19. The "Ninth" quickly followed with support of Operations "Kamehameha II and III," "Taylor," "Garfield," "Lincoln," and "Paul Revere." On July 29, 1966, the "Ninth" fired its 50,000th round.

On August 6, 1916, at Schofield Barracks, a regiment of field artillery was organized, the first completely motorized artillery unit in the U.S. Army, the 9th Field Artillery.

After the First World War came to a close, the 9th Artillery found itself at Fort Sill, Okla.

Early on the morning of November 8, 1942, the 9th Artillery landed with 105's mounted in half-tracks on the beaches of North Africa near Fedala, French Morocco.

March 15, 1945, the 9th commenced firing the preparation that started their move into Germany. Thirty-one minutes later the first unit stood on German soil. At Worms the battalion crossed the Rhine. From here the road led through Schweinfurt, Nuremberg, Munich, Salzburg and finally ended at Berchtesgaden on May 5, 1945.

On April 1, 1960, the 9th Artillery returned to its home in Hawaii.

1st Battalion, 69th Armor

The first armor battalion committed to the Vietnam conflict joined the 25th Infantry Division's 3rd Brigade Task Force at Pleiku during May 1966.

The 1st Battalion, 69th Armor, was reassigned from Cu Chi, where they supported the 2nd Brigade of the "Tropic Lightning" Division.

During their three and one-half months stay at Cu Chi, the "Black Panthers" participated in Operations "Circle Pines," "Kahuku," "Kaena" and "Maili."

The soldiers of the "Black Panther" Battalion joined the unit's B Company, which had been separated from its parent unit in February when it was assigned to the "Bronco" Brigade Task Force, 250 miles north of Saigon.

Operation "Lincoln," followed by "Garfield" and "Paul Revere," was the first attempt to incorporate heavy armor in the northern terrain, laden with plateaus and robust mountains.

The 69th Armor Regiment was activated on July 31, 1940, at Fort Knox, Kentucky, and was assigned to the 1st Armored Division.

In September 1943, when the structure of the armored divisions was changed, the 69th Armor was broken up, its elements re-organized, and one battalion sent to the Pacific Ocean area and one to the European Theater of Operations.

When the Korean War began in June 1950, the battalion spearheaded combat operations of the 25th Infantry Division to earn the appellation of "Leader," which remains today the designator of the 1st Battalion, 69th Armor.

The battalion was assigned to the 25th Infantry Division in November 1951. Following the Korean War, the battalion returned to Hawaii with the 25th Infantry Division in 1954.

In July 1963, the 3rd Battalion in Hawaii was redesignated as the present 1st Battalion, 69th Armor.

196th Light
Infantry Brigade

The first light infantry brigade in U.S. military history arrived at Vung Tau August 14, 1966, attached to the 25th Infantry "Tropic Lightning" Division.

The 196th Light Infantry Brigade (Separate) from Fort Devens, Massachusetts, is located at Tay Ninh under the command of Brigadier General Edward H. de Saussure, Jr.

With the attachment of the 196th, the 25th Infantry Division is the largest U.S. combat force in Vietnam.

Activated at Fort Devens on September 15, 1965, the 196th Brigade underwent eight strenuous months of individual and unit training. Approximately 50 per cent of the brigade were inexperienced soldiers when they began training. The brigade trained their men as a unit from Basic Combat Training to Advanced Individual Training through large unit tactical operations training.

Major units of the new brigade are the 4th Battalion, 31st Infantry; 3rd Battalion, 21st Infantry; 2nd Battalion, 1st Infantry and the 82nd Artillery Battalion.

Other units in the brigade are F Troop, 17th Armored Cavalry; 175th Engineer Company; 8th Support Battalion and Headquarters and Headquarters Company.

Symbols of mutual respect and a joint determination to be free fluttered against the unpredictable sky at Cu Chi, Vietnam, on Independence Day, 1966, fully half a world away from where it all began 190 years ago.

It was particularly appropriate that on this day the flags of two proud nations were flying side by side, for this was the day especially set aside to reaffirm our love of liberty and our determination to protect the heritage of freedom that has been passed on to us by others.

In less than six months of grinding heat and gushing rains, of sleepless nights and active days, of loneliness and sorrow, of tears and hurt, of vigilance and weariness, valor and pain, of unbent spirit and unwavering minds, "Old Glory" had once again climbed up to an old familiar place . . . among the friends and brothers she knew so well. . . .

"Tropic Lightning" Commanding Generals

Major General Fred C. Weyand, commanding general of the 25th Infantry "Tropic Lightning" Division, a veteran officer of three wars, knows the complexities of combat.

He was commissioned on May 6, 1938, and in 1943, he was assigned to the War Department for special schooling and then overseas for intelligence work in Burma and India with General Stilwell's headquarters. In March 1945, he was assigned to Headquarters, China Theater, in Chung King, where he served in an intelligence capacity until the end of the war.

He served with the 3rd Division in Japan and Korea in 1950 and 1951, successively as deputy chief of staff; as commanding officer of the 1st Battalion, 7th Infantry Regiment, through five battle campaigns; and finally as division operations officer. In 1954 he was assigned to the staff of the Secretary of the Army.

On August 22, 1964, General Weyand assumed command of the 25th Infantry Division at Schofield Barracks, Oahu, Hawaii, and took his division through intensive training geared for the type of combat essential to win in Vietnam. On March 28, 1966, he arrived at Cu Chi, Vietnam, with the headquarters elements of one of America's fightingest divisions.

During the deployment of the 25th Infantry Division to Vietnam, the idea of publishing a commemorative pictorial review book on the Division's Silver Anniversary, October 1, 1966, was conceived. The primary objectives of putting out a 400-page publication were to depict through the extensive use of pictures the 25-year history of the Division and to focalize on the present commitment of the "Tropic Lightning" soldier in Vietnam. The idea for the book belongs to the Division Information Officer, Major William C. Shepard. The responsibility for the publication was given to the Officer-in-Charge, 1st Lieutenant Patrick J. McKeand, and the Editor of "The 25th's 25th . . . in Combat," Specialist Five R. Vincent Puchalski. And that was the extent of the book's editorial staff. The staff expresses sincere appreciation to the following combat photographers whose work appears in the book: Staff Sergeant Alfred Batungbacal, Specialists Five Willy Fink-lea-Martinez, Ron Park and Robert Williams; Specialists Four David Alvaranza, John Dix, James Johnson, David McPeak, James Pardue and Bill Vickery; and Privates First Class Charles Bart, Leland Earl, Ron Nelson, Jere Richardson and Wallace Stachera, all serving with the 125th Signal Battalion at Cu Chi; 1st Lieutenant William H. Seely III, Staff Sergeant William Blue, Specialist Five Dennis Martens and Specialist Four Dale Sutphin, all serving with the 3rd Brigade Task Force at Pleiku; 1st Lieutenant Jack Carollo, Specialists Four Michael Hirsh and David Kleinberg, serving with the 15th Public Information Detachment at Cu Chi, and Master Sergeant John Howard. Our thanks also go to Bob Jones, who served as the Saigon Bureau Chief for the Honolulu Advertiser, and Jim Becker, on the staff of the Honolulu Star-Bulletin, for their forwards on Vietnam and Korea, respectively. Others who contributed to the publication include Hugh F. O'Reilly, formerly of the "Wolf-hounds," now with the Bank of Hawaii; the 25th Infantry Division Museum; Colonel Raymond C. Ball, Chief of the Army's Historical Services Division; the Army Photographic Agency, and Barbara Harris of the San Antonio Public Library. All were instrumental in assisting with the compilation of historical material. During the course of the publication, several trips were made between our office at Cu Chi, Republic of Vietnam, and the publisher's shop in Atlanta, Georgia. Thanks to the co-operation of the Air Force's Military Airlift Command, with military hops on Cargo planes like the one pictured on page 399, liaison between the two distant places was accomplished. Praise is due to three other individuals serving with the 25th. Specialist Four Todd C. Darch and Private First Class Louis J. Cullen were instrumental in the promotion of the book, and Specialist Six Tatsuo K. Schwartz was responsible for the artwork which appears on the back end sheet.

A special tribute goes to the tremendous staff of Albert Love Enterprises, Inc., subsidiary of McCall's Magazine, and publishers of "The 25th's 25th . . . in Combat." Despite the hardships and difficulties of coordinating the publication and meeting deadlines between the Division's base camp at Cu Chi and the printing plant in Atlanta, Love Enterprises contributed more than requested to insure the success of the pictorial review book.

So that the work of yesterday may neither be forgotten nor left unlinked with that of today, this history is respectfully dedicated to the men of the 25th Infantry Division who are assisting an ally in seeking out, combating and destroying an aggressor determined to disrupt reform.

Major General Fred C. Weyand
Commanding General

October 1, 1966

There are times in the lives of dedicated men when the course of human events leads to moments of trial and tribulation, courage and conviction, truth and triumph . . . In response, fighting men of the 25th have shouldered their share of responsibility . . . in halting the aggressor on the battlefield, in defending freedom with sweat and blood . . . and sometimes with life . . . and freedom itself. Men of the "Tropic Lightning" today, as in days and years passed, continue to bear the burden, pay the price, uphold the traditions of a heritage enriched with liberty, steeped in the spirit of brotherhood . . . This is the story of the 25th Infantry Division. No one knows it better than the man who has served the "Tropic Lightning." No one will ever know it better than he. . . .
