ON NOT CORRECTING CHILDREN'S WRITING
by Mrs. Selma Bokar
Originally presented in the Teachers & Writers Collaborative

I always had mixed feelings about whether not correcting children's creative writing was the right thing to do.

My instincts told me it wasn't, but I was attacked by all of my colleagues. I dared to mention what my inclination was, and I was shocked when I was courageous. "Never-not even for a purpose."

One of the ugliest words in the English language is "conglomerate". When you hear it, you think of a conglomerate of rocks or so, whadjet repeats, up the cafeteria steam table and teacher these

RECALLED FOR REVISION

Many of us who own recent model automobiles have received a communication from the manufacturer to return the vehicle to the dealer so that defects can be corrected. I must admit I was startled from my son's high school:

big carts which move from area to area as needed. A smaller cart is used to bring additional manipulative materials to students for their use. Still fir
