SYMPOSIUM ON THE VIETNAM WAR

Sponsored By

ASIAN STUDIES PROGRAM
COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES
EAST CAROLINA UNIVERSITY

Greenville, North Carolina

May 9 - 10, 1968

O P E N L E T T E R

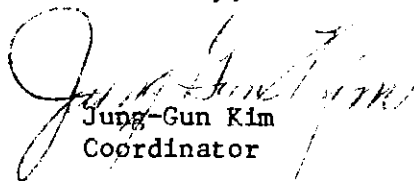

Dear Participants,

The Asian Studies Program of East Carolina University hereby cordially welcomes you to the campus of this university. It is a pleasure having you among us, and we hope that your stay in Greenville and experiences with the Symposium will be both pleasant and rewarding. Toward this end, if there is any way that we can be of service or assistance to you, please do not hesitate to let us know. (For your convenience, we have listed several phone numbers on an information page in this booklet.)

The present Symposium is the first in the short history of the Asian Studies Program, and we are particularly honored to have some of the nationally, if not internationally, renowned scholars from outside the campus to help us in this effort. A similar appreciation is hereby extended to the attendants, whose presence and support give a great moral uplift to us all. In this connection, if there are any suggestions and/or criticisms you care to offer us regarding the program, we will gratefully accept and consider them for the future.

We hope this booklet will assist you in your participation in the Symposium.

Sincerely,

Jung-Gun Kim
Coordinator

DISCUSSION (SESSION 3)

WILLIAM C. JOHNSTONE, born in Denver, Colorado, received his training at the University of Denver and Stanford University. Dr. Johnstone was dean of the School of Government at George Washington University, Washington, from 1944 to 1946. Prior to that time, he had been a professor in the Department of Political Science at the same institution, and had served for one year as acting dean and for nine years as dean of the junior college.

In 1946 he became Chief Public Affairs Officer in the American Embassy in New Delhi, India, and later became adviser to the U. S. Special Diplomatic Mission to Nepal. In the Department of State, he has served as Director of the Office of Educational Exchange and as deputy administrator for the field programs of the U. S. International Information Administration. Since 1953 Dr. Johnstone has been a professor of Asian studies in the School of Advanced International Studies at Johns Hopkins University. From 1957-59 he was co-director of the Rangoon-Hopkins Center for South East Asian Studies, Rangoon University, Rangoon, Burma.

His publications include The Future of Japan and Burma's Foreign Policy. He has also made extensive contributions to various professional journals.

He and his family now reside in Washington, D. C.

WILLIAM F. TROUTMAN, JR., Chairman of the Political Science Department at East Carolina University, received his bachelor's degree from Western Carolina College and his master's degree and doctorate from Duke University. His fields of specialization are political theory, comparative government, constitutional law, and American government and politics.

His primary research interest is in the relationship of religion, morality, and politics. In 1959 Professor Troutman received a fellowship to attend the Duke University Conference on Religion and Politics, and in 1963 he delivered a series of lectures at Gardner-Webb College on "Church and State in the Development and Evolution of the Sabbath." Continuing this line of research, he published an article in 1964 in the Faculty Publications of Appalachian State Teachers College on "Church and State in the Tradition of American Catholics."

Dr. Troutman was born in Asheville, North Carolina, and has held academic positions in three other institutions of higher learning in his native state: Gardner-Webb College; Atlantic Christian College; and Appalachian State Teachers College.

QUINCY WRIGHT, distinguished educator, is a native of Massachusetts. His degrees were taken at Lombard College, Galesburg, Illinois, and the University of Illinois. Dr. Wright's teaching career, principally in the area of international law, has been established while a professor at such schools at the University of Pennsylvania, Harvard, the University of Minnesota, the University of Chicago (now emeritus), and the University of Virginia (new emeritus). He was visiting research scholar on the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, New York City, in 1956-57, and has been visiting professor at the Indian School of International Studies, New Delhi; Columbia University; American University, Cairo, Egypt; University of Ankara (Turkey); Makerere University, Kampala, Uganda; Cornell University, Ithaca, New York; and Syracuse University.

Dr. Wright was special assistant in international law for the United States Navy Department in 1918 and 1921. He was consultant to the Foreign Economic Administration and Department of State in 1943-44 and was technical adviser to the American member of the International Military Tribunal in Nuremberg in 1945. He has also served as consultant to UNESCO and as consultant to the United States High Commissioner in Germany, 1949-50.

He has been president of numerous professional organizations, including the American Association of University Professors (1944-46), American Political Science Association (1949), International Political Science Association (1950), American Society of International Law (1955-56), and the U. N. Association of Greater Chicago (1953). In addition, Dr. Wright has served as a trustee of Knox College, as director of the Foreign Bondholders Protective Council, and as a member of the board of editors for the American Journal of International Law. He was recipient of the award from the American Council of Learned Societies in 1961 and is a fellow of the American Academy of Art and Sciences.

As an author, he is credited with the following publications:

Problems of Stability and Progress in International Relations;
The Study of International Relations; Contemporary International Law, A Balance Sheet; International Law and the United Nations;
The Strengthening of International Law; and The Role of International Law in the Elimination of War. Earlier contributions include Enforcement of International Law through Municipal Law in the United States, Control of American Foreign Relations, Mandates Under the League of Nations, The Causes of War and the Conditions of Peace, Legal Problems in the Far Eastern Conflict, and A Study of War.

He now lives in Charlottesville, Virginia.

PHILIP J. ADLER joined the East Carolina University faculty last year as a professor of East European history. He came to East Carolina University from the University of Maryland, where he was a lecturer in Russian history. A native of Pennsylvania, he received his undergraduate training at Regis College in Denver and Loyola University of Los Angeles. His interest in East Europe was intensified during his army service in Europe, after which he entered the University of Vienna to pursue a curriculum focusing upon the modern history of East and Central Europe. His academic specialty is Balkan history since the eighteenth century.

Dr. Adler served for four years in the United States State Department as an intelligence analyst for East European affairs, spending part of this time in the Bureau of Intelligence and Research and the remainder on assignment in the United States consulate in Monterrey, Mexico.

His article on émigré propaganda action during World War I was published in 1965 by the Maryland History Magazine.

JOHN M. HOWELL is an Alabama native who received his training in international law and organization at the University of Alabama and Duke University. His major research and publication interest deals with the domestic jurisdiction limitation on international organizations. He has presented papers on this topic at regional and national meetings of the American Society of International Law and has published some of his findings as articles in several different professional journals, including the American Journal of International Law, Journal of Politics, and The Western Political Quarterly. He contributed a chapter on domestic jurisdiction to The International Law Standard and Commonwealth Developments, a monograph published by Duke University Press in 1966. His most recent contribution, dealing with the role of Commonwealth members in developing the domestic jurisdiction concept, appears in the current volume of the Canadian Yearbook of International Law.

Dr. Howell is Professor of Political Science and Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at East Carolina University. He is married and resides at _____ in Greenville.

RALPH BRAIBANTI, a native of Connecticut, attended Connecticut State College and Syracuse University. Dr. Braibanti's service in World War II included two years as a military government officer in Japan. On the faculty of Kenyon College from 1949 to 1953, he was on leave in 1950-51 as Assistant Director of the American Political Science Association. During this time he also lectured at George Washington and American Universities and served as a consultant to the Governmental Affairs Institute.

In the summer of 1952 he was in Okinawa as political adviser to the Civil Administrator for the Ryukyu Islands. Under auspices of a post-doctoral fellowship and a grant he did research in Pakistan in 1957, and in India and Pakistan in 1958 and 1959. In the summer of 1963, he was political consultant on planning for the Agency for International Development in Pakistan.

Dr. Braibanti has organized and directed several summer institutes on Asia for college and high school teachers. He served for four years as a member and chairman of the political science committee of the Conference Board of Associated Research Councils, which administers the Fulbright program for established scholars. He has participated extensively as a consultant in activities relating to the administrative and political development of new states.

He has read papers at several international and national conferences and has lectured widely in Asian countries, in Canada, and at such universities as the University of Manitoba, University of Michigan, Syracuse University, and Harvard University.

Dr. Braibanti is currently on the board of editors of the Journal of Politics, Comparative Political Studies, Comparative Politics, and the Indian journal Business and Public Administration Review. He is also serving on several committees, including the executive committee of the Comparative Administration Group (CAG) of the American Society for Public Administration.

He is author of Research on the Bureaucracy of Pakistan, and is editor and co-author of Asian Bureaucratic Systems Emergent from the British Imperial Tradition, and of various studies in professional journals. He has been co-editor and co-author of other books and a contributing author to such volumes as Bureaucracy and Political Development, edited by Joseph LaPalombara. He is editor and co-author of Political and Administrative Development, scheduled for publication this year.

He is James B. Duke Professor of Political Science at Duke University where he has been a member of the faculty since 1953.

JUNG-GUN KIM, Coordinator of the Asian Studies Program at East Carolina University, joined the faculty in 1965 as a professor in the Department of Political Science. Dr. Kim received his training at the University of Missouri at Kansas City, George Washington University, and the University of Maryland. While at the University of Maryland, he taught courses in the areas of Far Eastern Affairs and International Relations.

His interest and research into certain aspects of various international organizations have been expressed in his articles, published by the Journal of Inter-American Studies, Caribbean Quarterly, and the Korean Journal of International Law. His latest contribution, an article in the current issue of the Journal of Inter-American Studies, concerns nonmember participation in the Organization of American States.

He is married and resides at _____ in Greenville.
