CAPE KENNEDY, FLORIDA (UPI)—For the first time in nearly two years, an American launch team has received unconditional clearance to start the countdown for the launch of a manned spaceship.

Apollo-7 Astronauts Walter Schirra, Donn Eisele and Walter Cunningham received the "go" for an Oct. 11 launch after a day-long top-level review Thursday of all preparations for the opening round in man's drive to the moon.

"Never have so many been in such good shape and so ready to fly," said Lt. Gen. Samuel C. Phillips, the Apollo program director.

The three Apollo-7 Astronauts are scheduled to fly their 16-ton ship around the earth 163 times for 11 days in an all-important shakedown run to prove Apollo is ready for a trip to the moon.

The last time American Astronauts received similar clearance came in November, 1966, when Gemini Astronauts James Lovell and Edwin Aldrin were preparing for the windup flight of the nation's second generation manned spacecraft.
