al basis for attack helicopter doctrine/tactics is inadequate and lacks necessary unity; the question of an Aviation Branch should be re-examined. Also, the present division of roles/missions between the Army and Air Force may be counter-productive to development of effective, comprehensive battlefield aviation employment doctrine. Current US Army attack helicopter doctrine is not complete. The thesis demonstrates that the tank-killing helicopter mission paramount in current doctrine is not the only appropriate role; in fact, it is probably not the best role. Attack helicopter capabilities far exceed the operational requirements reflected in current doctrine. (Author)

Survey of U.S. Army Technology Base R&D in the Fire Support Mission Area.
Technical rept.
F. W. Niedenfuer. Aug 77. 119p Rept no. MTR-7637
Contract F19628-76-C-0001

This report discusses the U.S. Army Technology Base R&D work units which are relevant to the Fire Support Mission Area. A simple effectiveness model is developed and used to identify needed technological improvements in cannon and rocket fire. R&D work units are then examined in light of their potential contribution to combat effectiveness. Areas of insufficient R&D activity are identified and some relevant management issues are discussed. Airborne Platforms versus Airbreathing Strategic Threats. A Performance Assessment Methodology.
Final rept. Jan-Jun 80.
Courtland L. Bohn, A. Foster Cooper, and Bruno J. Manz. Jun 80. 87p Rept no. DAS-TR-80-2

This paper presents a new methodology for assessing the performance of area defense weapon systems against airbreathing strategic threats. The methodology is probabilistic rather than simulative. It intertwines surveillance sensor, interceptor, and command, control and communication network. Furthermore, it allows for incorporating the propensity of the airbreathing threats to maneuver. The probabilistic approach provides the tools for direct sensitivity analyses against overall weapon system performance including tracking errors. The approach is amenable to direct interceptor scheduling and yields closed-form solutions, thus permitting relatively easy (and inexpensive) programming. The analytical presentation of the model is supplemented by a computerization and a numerical example. (Author)

Review and Integration of Target Acquisition and Designation for Artillery Attack of Armor.
Final rept.
17 Apr 78. 110p Rept no. BDM/W-78-082-BR

The Battlefield Systems Integration Directorate of the Army Materiel Readiness and Development

Command (DARCOM/BSI) requested that The BDM Corporation review and analyze three artillery related problems: the integration and coordination of target acquisition and designation resources for artillery attack of armored systems in Zone 1, the same review and analysis for Zone 2 as for Zone 1, and the ammunition requirements for conventional artillery ammunition fire against area targets normally found on the modern battlefield. For the purpose of accomplishing Tasks 1 and 2, target acquisition and designation resources were defined as being: standoff target acquisition system (SOTAS), remotely piloted vehicles (RPVs), the advanced scout helicopter (ASH), a forward observer with a ground laser locator designator (GLLD), a forward observer without a ground laser locator designator, REMBASS sensor items, and ground surveillance radars. Early in the research effort, it was determined that the current organization of the ground artillery locating and designating teams now called Fire Support Teams of FIST appear to be very efficient units. ciated with better equipped construction battalions. The requirements of the command and the lack of major tactical activity in the immediate area have contributed to this situation. Primary projects have been the construction and erection of a pipeline and POL Tank Farm Facility; the earth moving, concrete work, and vertical erection of a major COSTAR installation; the earth work, concrete, and erection activities associated with a twenty quonset PX complex; and numerous lesser projects to include route maintenance, bridge repair, hauling fill as required, and road and heliport construction to include grading, finishing, and penning for dust control.

Activities and events involving the Blackhorse Regiment ranged from counternsurgency operations to participation in Civic Action and Revolutionary Development programs. During the reporting period the people of BIEN HOA, LONG KHANH, BINH TUY and BINH DUONG Provinces witnessed the 11th Armored Cavalry in the pursuit of the Viet Cong. Lines of communications hitherto the private domain of the Viet Cong have been opened and secured from BIEN HOA in the west to TANH LINH in the northeast. Neither tasks assigned nor terrain traversed proved to be a deterrent factor in the Regiment's successful accomplishment of its missions.

The battalion remains under the operational control of the 12th Regiment, 3d Marine Division. Continually operating with only one firing battery at the battalion base camp in the Dong Ha Combat Base near the Demilitarized Zone, the battalion has continued to provide intense volumes of artillery fire for supported units throughout Quang Tri Province and in defense of the Dong Ha Combat Base. All firing batteries have displaced from base camp for various periods of time on direct support or reinforcing missions. The battery remaining in base camp has been in general support of the 3d Marine Division with direct support of small unit operations from the base camp position for short periods. The battalion has provided artillery fire support for the following units: 1st and 2d ARVN Regiments; ARVN Airborne Task Force; 2d and 3d Battalions, 3d Marine Regiment; 1st, 2d, 3d Battalions, 9th Marine Regiment; 1st Battalion, 26th Marine Regiment; 3d Reconnaissance Battalion, 3d Marine Division; several Combined Action Companies, and many convoys moving between various areas. This Operational Report Lessons Learned covers the period 1 February to 30 April 1967. The Brigade has continued to conduct operations to locate and destroy the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese Armed Forces, supply lines of communication and installations. Operations were continued within the Brigade base TAOR (Tactical Area of Responsibility). The Brigade has also continued to carry out the vital phase of Civic Action and Civil Affairs in the Revolutionary Development program, which has contributed to the overall counterinsurgency effort in VIETNAM. As during the last reporting period, to best accomplish its mission, the Brigade again conducted four battalion size or larger operations in addition to its Civic Action and Civil Affairs program. Operations conducted during this period were Operation BIG SPRING, JUNCTION CITY ALTERNATE, Phase I (Parachute Assault), JUNCTION CITY II and Operation NEWARK. Each of these operations were characterized by an aggressive assault on enemy areas and in every operation, the Brigade distinguished itself completing every mission in a vigorous and extremely professional manner. During this period, the Brigade became the holder of still another first in VIETNAM with the first parachute assault in the Republic and the first such operation in fifteen years, as the spearhead of the largest ground operation of the war to date.

Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 79th Engineer Group (Construction) remained stationed at the Plantation Compound in Long Binh. The reporting period brought about a continual improvement of the facilities within the compound, primarily under the self-help program using Vietnamese laborers. In general the period May 1967 through July 1967, the rainy season in the 79th Engineer Group area, was characterized by continuing emphasis on operational support missions in support of tactical units of II Field Force, Vietnam (II FFORC-CEV) and in preparation for operations to be conducted during the coming dry season.

At the beginning of the reporting period, large scale enemy attacks on major installations and cities were still in progress throughout the Republic of Vietnam. As a result of the Tet offensive, Civilian Irregular Defense Group (CIDG) forces assumed new missions, construction projects in progress were delayed, new construction was necessitated, plans to relocate open, close, and convert camps were deferred or cancelled and thousands of refugees were assisted. The most significant single action during the quarter occurred at Special Forces camp Lang Vei. The large scale attack that had been expected occurred on 7 February when a combined armor and infantry attack overran the camp. The attack marked the first tactical utilization of tanks by the enemy in South Vietnam.

During the reporting period Viet Cong forces did not initiate large scale assaults against any Special Forces camps, but numerous probes were launched against Forward Operating Bases. Rapid reaction by flareships, FAC, and airstrikes were decisive factors in our favor in most cases. The Viet Cong have shown great reluctance to become decisively engaged. Heavy losses have been inflicted on Viet Cong logistical bases. Tons of rice, medical supplies, arms and ammunition have been captured and destroyed during the last ninety days. These losses, coupled with the flexible reaction capability of airborne US forces, have prevented the Viet Cong from massing large units. CIDG forces are cooperating with FWMAF forces in I, II, and III Corps. They provide blocking forces, screen the flanks of FWMAF units, and obtain intelligence through the technique of saturation patrolling. The platoon size patrol has proven to be the most effective size unit for medium and long range operations in search of the Viet Cong.

From 19 July 1968 to 25 May 1969, the 101st Airborne Division underwent major transformations in organization, operational concepts and techniques, deployment of major elements and support concepts. The Division's area of operation, centered around the city of Hue, increased in size from an area 30 kilometers in length along the coast and ranging 40 kilometers inland toward the mountains to an area which now extends 108 kilometers in length along the coast and 70 kilometers deep to the Laotian border. Operations were conducted against the enemy's lines of communication and base areas in the mountains; initially, however, the Division focused primarily on the elimination of enemy forces in the coastal plains and the protection of population centers, allied lines of communications, key installations and the rice producing areas. With the virtual elimination of organized VC forces from the coastal plains through the combined efforts of the 101st Airborne Division, the 1st ARVN Division and Thua Thien Sector forces, the Division began to orient more and more on VC main force units and NVA in their base areas located in the mountainous jungle area adjacent to the Laotian border. This shift in operations was made possible by the significant improvement in the operational ability of the Regional and Popular forces to control the coastal plains and populated areas with only limited assistance from the Division.

The mission assigned to the 116th Engineer Battalion was the upgrading and maintenance of QL-20, and maintenance of QL-1 and LTL-3B in the unit's assigned area of responsibility. The unit was also to provide operational support for Task Force South. Engineer support in construction of MACV Get-Well program, and construction and maintenance of Phan Thiet and Bao Loc airfields. After arriving in country at Phan Rang, the 116th Engineer Battalion moved to its various base camps. Headquarters Company and Company D constructed a base camp at Bao Loc. Companies A and C constructed a base camp at Di Linh. Company B moved to Phan Thiet and constructed its base camp at LZ Betty. In January of 1969, Companies A and C relocated from Di Linh to B'Sar and constructed a new base camp. During the last ten months, the 116th Engineer Battalion was involved in road construction and maintenance, civic action projects, and airfield maintenance and repair. Also, construction of living facilities for MACV advisors, infantry, artillery, and cavalry units in their assigned areas of responsibility was accomplished.

The following observations were made in late November 1969 and pertain to a six month period as Commanding General, II Field Force Vietnam Artillery from May 21, 1969 to November 20, 1969. It might be useful at the outset to comment briefly on the enemy and friendly situation in the II Field Force area during that period. As a result of FWMAF successes, the main force enemy units have moved into outlying areas. It appears that the enemy's major objectives were to reopen LOC's and to disrupt the FWMAF pacification effort. His tactics were characterized by stand off attacks using mortars and rockets, sapper reconnaissance and selected attacks, and main force attacks in strength along the border. The enemy's ability to avoid contact whenever possible continued to be his greatest asset. On the other hand, his ability to choose the time and place for battle was being attested. Our successes have enabled us to accelerate Vietnamization of the war. Territorial security forces were being committed to the security of the populated areas and ARVN units were pushing out to interdict enemy movement and to engage him in the outlying areas. FWMAF continued combat and combat support activities with a view towards accelerating pacification, improving the combat effectiveness of RVNAF, and eroding enemy capability in all areas.

During the 12 months ending 3 May 1970 the application of Engineer effort in the I and II Corps Tactical Zones has changed significantly, in consonance with the policies to Vietnamize the military operations and to pacify and strengthen the economy and political structure of South Vietnam. During this period the proportion of total Engineer effort in support of US troop units has remained relatively constant. However, the specific tasks are considerably more related to relocating US units from forward areas being turned over to ARVN and to supporting US units in pacification and regional development of populated areas. At the same time, the major Engineer effort once assigned to base construction is now being expended to build a primary road system. Thus the 18th Brigade effort devoted to strengthening and developing the economic and political structure of South Vietnam increased many fold this past year to become our present major requirement. The discussions which follow will be divided into three major categories: support of regional development and nationhood; support of US and Free World Forces; other items of interest. (Author)

During the past year, the QNSC continued to provide for the logistics support of approximately 90,000 Free World Forces. At the same time, the initial phase of major retrograde program was begun. Significant reductions were made in excess stocks at the QN Depot and at DSU's. The TO and E equipment of one infantry brigade and an artillery battalion was received, processed and disposed of in operation Keystone Bluejay. Other units were encouraged to turn in non-mission essential equipment. Throughout the retrograde program, strong command emphasis has been placed on the objective 'RETRO RIGHT' to maintain high standards in the care and handling of retrograde items. Concurrent with the increased retrograde program, QNSC began a major effort to consolidate logistics support facilities in order to decrease security requirements and make maximum use of a decreasing base of logistics manpower resources. Consolidation of QN depot areas, reduction of Vung Ro Bay facilities, elimination of the QN-Pleiku pipeline and pump stations, and reduction of the QN Ammunition Base Depot to an ASP are some of the major actions accomplished. Plans have been developed for additional restructuring and consolidation which will be accomplished consistent with the phased withdrawal of US forces. A final but most noteworthy accomplishment has been the success achieved by QNSC in the ARVNIZATION Program.

The build up of the Vietnamese Armed Forces communications capability is of paramount importance as an objective in the efforts at Vietnamization. This report places Vietnamization activities first, then nonequipment topics, followed by items concerning equipment and its use, and finally, a section on topics solely concerning the 1st Signal Brigade. Each item is labeled as to primary source, i. e., USARV or 1st Signal Brigade. The topics and ideas presented here are suitable for use in many areas. Possible use in the Department of Defense and Army Training Centers and Schools is readily apparent. Along with the US Army's Combat Development Command, The Office of the Assistant Chief of Staff for Force Development, the Electronics Command and other commands of the Army Materiel Command, the United States Army Strategic Communications Command, Defense Communications Agency, and finally, the Office of the Assistant Chief of Staff for Communications-Electronics, Department of the Army.

On 15 April 1969 the 173d Airborne Brigade relinquished its role as a major United States reaction force in Vietnam to assume a new and challenging task in the four northern districts of Binh Dinh Province in AO Lee. The operation was named Washington Green and assigned the Brigade the mission of conducting operations in support of GVN Pacification. Involved were a wide variety of requirements, the principal of which form the so called 'Three Front Concept'; these were to be performed simultaneously and included the pursuit of province and district pacification plans, the upgrading of the training, leadership, and combat effectiveness of all GVN forces operating in the AO, and finally the conduct of effective combat operations that would complement, exploit, and further stabilize GVN agencies operating in support of pacification.

The supply system in Vietnam was considered to be most responsive. Material readiness rates in Vietnam across the board were very high. After shifting from parcel post (and thereby air transportation) to over-the-road movement of Class IX repair parts from the Army depot to outlying direct support units, as much as five days of shipping time were saved. This, in turn, impacted on the volume of supplies required in the system and also on the timeliness of repair of materiel which was degraded. The increased utilization of the rail system between Da Nang and Phu Bai reduced the necessity for both over-the-road and sea transportation for low priority goods. Economies in the use of drayage transportation have already been effected by the throughput of Class I and Class IV commodities direct from the Deep Water Port to the ultimate customer. As Local Nationals can be trained in many of the logistical skills such as truck driving, key punch operation, food handling, warehousing, receiving, shipping, MHE operation, and so forth, Type A military units can be effectively changed to Type B units and ultimately can be reduced to TDA organizations that would include a minimum of US Army managerial personnel. Through the medium of Project Buddy, the command has been quite successful in providing on-the-job training and classes for the ARVN logistical personnel. Retrograde and disposal operations, while among the more important of the command's several missions, will continue to increase in importance as more and more troops are withdrawn from MR-I.

Since 15 July 1965, when this battalion was organized, there has been an ever increasing workload and diversification of manpower requirements in terms of both quantity and skills. Based upon present and known future needs, manpower requirements must be met to perform required missions fully satisfactorily. With expansion of present missions, plus known new missions, it is becoming apparent that the battalion's present organization is improperly designed. Certain inflexibilities exist in some units, and various MOS skills are not in numbers required. Repetition of basic military training subjects is necessary, because men tend to forget matters that are not a part of their daily life. For example, a mechanic working in a post shop may soon lose his knowledge of military map reading if he does not periodically have refresher training on the subject. In addition, the subject of Materiel Readiness requires considerable emphasis and will be so treated. It is anticipated that cross-training of personnel through CJT will be a continuing need.

The group's mission during the first half of the reporting period was general support of the 3d Manned Division, reinforcing the fires of the 12th Manned. Upon the formation of Provisional Corps Vietnam, the group's mission became general support of the corps, reinforcing the fires of the 12th Manned, 1st Cavalry Division Artillery and 101st Air Cavalry Division Artillery. The group's principal function within its general support mission was the operation of the corps artillery counterbattery program along the DMZ. In support of this program, the bulk of the group's heavy artillery and target acquisition assets were concentrated along the southern edge of the DMZ.

The current logistical concept in ICTZ involves the operation of one wholesale system operated by the Navy which is complemented and extended by Army and Marine Corps logistical units. Navy has supply responsibility for wholesale Class I and III, II and IV common and construction material. Army and Marine Corps provide for retail distribution of supplies beyond Navy Support Activity, Da Nang Storage Activity (Army), and Navy supply point, Chu Lai and have full responsibility for service peculiar Class II and IV, Class V, and required services for their respective forces. This system is working well and results in little or no duplication among the services. (Author)

Although directed toward providing support for combat operations, US construction programs have had a significant effect on the nation-building efforts of South Vietnam. Contractors and engineer troop units have trained thousands of Vietnamese in a wide variety of construction skills. U. S. investment in the highway program and in the development of ports and airfields has already enhanced the Vietnamese economy and will make an even greater contribution in the future. In addition, the many facilities built for military forces will when turned over to Vietnam after U. S. withdrawal have great economic value to the Republic.

D. P. McAuliffe, 26 Nov 70, 67p OACSFOR-OT-UT-71B004
Distribution limitation now removed.

The year 1970 has been a momentous one for the Army of the Republic of Vietnam (ARVN) forces of III Corps and Military Region 3 (MR 3). This year witnessed major turning points in the effectiveness of ARVN combat forces, in the relationship between ARVN forces and US forces, and in the nature of the external threat to MR 3 from enemy main force units. These factors have had a significant impact on the progress of Vietnamization wherein the Armed Forces of the Republic of Vietnam (RVNAF) assume full responsibility for the conduct of military operations and thus permit the redeployment of US forces from Vietnam with minimum risk.

The Regiment concluded operations in Cambodia and moved to operational areas in the heart of MR 3 where it participated in what is categorized as low-intensity counterinsurgency operations. At the same time, other factors were at work which impacted significantly on the areas requiring command attention and effort. A careful balance had to be struck among the competing demands of combat operations, resource conservation, maintenance, training, drug abuse and human relations. As the tempo of combat operations was reduced and replacements came increasingly through assignment of relatively short term troopers from redeploying units, the latter areas assumed ever greater importance. In short, during the period the Regiment turned the corner away from concentrating on combat operations toward meeting a broad spectrum of equally important requirements. The trick was to make the turn without losing the esprit that marked the Regiment's greatness. Any success achieved in that endeavor reflects the leadership of the troop-level officers and non-commissioned officers who carried it off.

Senior Officer Debriefing Report: II Field Force Vietnam Artillery, Period 15 June 1970 thru 18 January 1971, Edward F. Gudgel, Jr., 18 Jan 71, 54p OACSFOR-OT-UT-71B019
Distribution limitation now removed.

The period 15 June 1970 to 18 January 1971, a time of dynamic change and transition within Military Region 3 (MR 3), is described in this report. Simultaneous with the complete withdrawal of US forces from Cambodia on 30 June, the level of combat activity in MR 3 dropped precipitously and then remained at a relatively constant low level through the beginning of 1971. Major ARVN units continued offensive operations against enemy divisions in Cambodia. US units concentrated their combat power against VC main force units of regimental size and smaller. US forces increased the level and scope of their activities designed to assist RVNAF forces in their efforts to absorb an ever-expanding role in assuming full responsibility for prosecuting the war. Added emphasis was given to the Phoenix Program and its efforts to eliminate the Viet Cong infrastructure. Territorial forces grew in size, consolidated pacification gains, and increased the level of security throughout the area. Concurrent with the successful execution of these tasks, several US combat units were redeployed and plans were laid for further drawdowns in US troop strength.

The most significant development within the reporting period was the reorganization of Viet Cong local forces in southern Military Region 1. In Quang Nam Province, several distinct units were reorganized as battalion size units. In Quang Tin Province, a few North Vietnamese Army (NVA) units were disbanded and the personnel sent to the local forces as replacements. The enemy withheld his main units (2d NVA Division, 141st NVA Infantry Regiment) from battle, relying on the local forces instead. In Northern Military Region 1, the enemy continued his consolidation of bases in the western areas and maintained his attempts to expand to the east. There was no significant increase in strength levels, which remained high. (Author)

During the reporting period the 23d Artillery Group continued to provide medium and heavy artillery fire in general support and general support reinforcing missions throughout Military Region 3, RVN. The Group continued to occupy fire support bases along the border enabling these units to provide artillery support to ARVN units remaining in Cambodia. Three artillery raids were conducted during this quarter. The raids, normally planned from one to three days in duration, were used to engage enemy targets previously out of range of Group artillery units and to demonstrate the fire power of heavy artillery to the ARVN. As an additional benefit, the artillery raids enhanced the unit's combat proficiency in reconnaissance, selection, and occupation of position.

This report reflects personal assessment of conditions in Military Region 2 and is based upon a service of fourteen months in the region. While failures continue to mar the scene, there also is considerable basis for confidence. While this is apparent when one compares the situation now with the situation one year ago, it is obvious if considered in terms of what has been withdrawn. In March 1970, US maneuver forces included the 4th Infantry Division, the 173d Airborne Brigade, and TF South (a multi-battalion force operating primarily in Binh Thuan Province). Now only the 173d Airborne Brigade plus two separate battalions (1/22d Infantry and the 1/10th Cavalry) and Company C, 75th Infantry (Rangers) remain. An assessment of just how much the Vietnamese can be expected to do on their own is discussed from different angles.

The past year has been one of significant change in the nature and intensity of the war in Vietnam. It has also been a time of great challenge to Army aviation with the high point coming during Operation LAMSON 719 in February and March 1971. That campaign provided further proof of the efficacy of the air mobility concept and the resiliency of the helicopter and its crew in mid to high intensity combat. It also emphasized the critical importance of responsive aviation maintenance and supply and the requirement for close and continuous coordination between planner, operator, and logisticians.

During the reporting period, the division continued close coordination and cooperation with the 1st Infantry Division (ARVN) and Thua Thien Province and District officials. This close coordination has contributed greatly to the progress of Vietnamization. During this period, numerous combined operations were conducted with the ARVN. The largest operation combining ARVN, division and nondivisional assets was LAMSON 719 in Quang Tri Province and Laos. Jefferson Glen/Monsoon Plan 70 operations continued throughout the reporting period.

The period covered by this report was characterized by a low level of enemy activity while US units were being drawn down and inactivated. Enemy activity consisted mainly of sapper attacks, attacks by fire, and terrorism. 23d Artillery Group was assigned to USARV, but under the operational control of HQ, Third Regional Assistance Command, and under Saigon Support Command for administration and logistical support except for personnel matters. The group dealt directly with HQ, USARV on personnel matters.

The earlier portion of the time frame considered can best be described as a period of refitting, receiving replacement personnel and intensive training. Particular emphasis and interest were focused on the 20th Tank Squadron (M48A3). The units did return to action in time to participate in the counteroffensive and contributed significantly to its success. The Bnade, however, never received a mission and its activity was limited to monitoring the administrative and logistical support of the units.

Commanders recommendations: (1) In an effort to alleviate the problem of a near 100% turnover of personnel in any one unit during a short span of time, such as happened to the 596th CM Co. this organization is making inter-unit transfers of personnel with varying DEROS where and when possible. (2) That high level assistance be applied to create initial and continuous coordination between the ETO, Transportation, and Commissary to regulate arrival of ETO trucks as required. (3) That this command be notified, giving the ASL and/or PLL of new units programmed to arrive in-country, sufficiently in advance of the units arrival date, minimum 90 days, in order that the depot will have time to establish supply support. (4) That during the initial planning phase of all future construction projects, such as the Camp Friendship Cold Storage Facility, a detail study of all personnel and equipment to operate the facility be made. This would allow sufficient time to procure the additional personnel and equipment, to be on hand to coincide with completion date of the project. (5) That more DAC personnel be hired to lend more continuity in the supply operation to offset the fast turnover of military personnel. (6) Security measures for the depot supplies i.e., fencing, lighting, etc. are very poor or non-existence. Recommend that the work orders submitted be given top priority and command emphasis for completion at the earliest possible date. With millions of dollars worth of inventory on hand this project is a must.

The August-October quarter was extremely productive and very educational for the 168th Engineer Combat Battalion. It was productive in that the Di An, Phu Loi, Lai Khe, and Phuoc Vinh cantonments began to show visible evidence of the battalion's horizontal and vertical construction efforts. In this regard, outstanding achievements of the line companies were officially recognized. The quarter was educational to the battalion in that many construction techniques were improved and perfected, and that new units were phased into Vietnam. In the process, it was learned that it often pays to take a long hard look at previously established policies and procedures to see if they may have become outmoded by the passing of time. The battalion also learned the important lesson that heavy personnel turnover at the end of its first year in Vietnam need not prove unsettling and disruptive to the construction effort. In this regard, the battalion undertook the 'North 40' project in the midst of the transition period without noticeable loss of effectiveness.

During this reporting period this organization engaged in extensive construction projects normally associated with construction battalions. The requirements of the command and the lack of major tactical activity in the immediate area have contributed to this situation. Primary projects have been the construction of a Logistical Complex which includes earthwork, concrete, erection of steel warehouses, prefabricated reefers and tropical wood frame warehouses, construction of ammunition berms, open storage areas and road networks; a security lighting system which circumvents the 1st Air Cav Div's base camp and involves the erection of 374 poles and laying of approximately 80 miles of wire; the rehabilitation of a forward area medium lift airfield for C-130 aircraft and the installation of an AM-2 matting - T-17 membrane combination; construction of a Division Tactical Operations Center which can withstand a direct hit from a 105 mm shell; maintenance of National Route 19 from BR 627471 to BR 222521; the earthwork, concrete and erection activities associated with a 140 bed Mobile Surgical Hospital; construction of the world's largest heliport; completing the erection of sixty-six security guard towers; earthwork, concrete and erection of the Division G-Staff Administration Building; construction of a T-17 membrane C-130 airstrip at Van Canh, Vietnam and a latente C-123 airstrip at Vinh Thanh. Numerous lesser projects included bridge repair, hauling fill as required, operating a rock quarry which produced 19,017 cu yds of crushed rock during this reporting period and road maintenance which required grading, finishing and paving for dust control.

The mission of the battalion is to provide direct support, back-up direct support and general support in the areas of airframe, engines, aircraft systems, aircraft armament, including the weapons, and all avionics navigation and communication equipment for 1100 aircraft located in the Republic of Vietnam III and IV Corps areas. During this reporting period, battalion direct support units processed 610 aircraft and 635 aircraft components through their maintenance facilities. A total of 130,525 man-hours was expended in repairing these aircraft and components. In the general support role, 68 aircraft were repaired and 31 aircraft, which had incurred major damage, were inspected and evaluated for disposition determinations. A total of 827 aircraft components were inspected, repaired, tested and returned to serviceable status, at an expenditure of 84,250 man-hours. (Author)
