Lessons Learned 5-67 - Civil Disorders - Headquarters, Task Force Detroit.
Operations rept. for period ending 2 Aug 67.
28 Sep 67, 174p OACSFOR-OT-RD-67X043

Widespread racial disorders erupted in metropolitan Detroit early on Sunday morning, 23 July 1967. The disturbance began in Detroit's 10th Precinct area at the climax of a police raid on an illegal afterhours liquor establishment in the 9000 block on Twelfth Street. At 0510 hours on Sunday the 10th Precinct received the first calls for police assistance from the Twelfth Street neighborhood. At 0630 hours the first fire had started and the arriving fire trucks drew large crowds. From 0800 hours until noon, there was a lull in the area. Starting about noon gangs started surging along Twelfth Street, looting and setting fire to businesses, moving off onto the side streets and finally into private homes. Mayor Cavanagh requested State Police assistance shortly before 1500 hours. When looting and arson grew he asked for the Michigan National Guard. With nightfall the looting and number of fire calls increased substantially. Shortly after 1800 hours, the first of more than 8,000 guardsmen arrived in the city deploying from Central High School through the riot-torn areas. Police barricades were put up, a curfew announced, bars, gas stations and public places closed. A state of public emergency was declared in Detroit by Governor Romney effective 1800, 23 July 1967. Negro gangs, confined at the first outbreak to 29 blocks on the west side, spread over a 14-square mile area Monday. Early Monday, 24 July, Governor Romney recommended the deployment of Federal Troops to the City of Detroit to assist State and local authorities in reestablishing law and order. (Author)

Wargaming and Interactive Color Graphics.

CONF-800819-3

Contract W-7405-ENG-48

Summer computer simulation conference, Seattle, WA, USA, 25 Aug 1980.

JANUS is a two-sided interactive color graphic simulation in which human commanders can direct their forces, each trying to accomplish their mission. This competitive synthetic battlefield is used to explore the range of human ingenuity under conditions of incomplete information about enemy strength and deployment. Each player can react to new situations by planning new unit movements, using conventional and nuclear weapons, or moditying unit objectives. Conventional direct fire among tanks, infantry fighting vehicles, helicopters, and other units is automated subject to constraints of target acquisition, reload rate, range, suppression, etc. Artillery and missile indirect fire systems deliver conventional munitions, smoke, and nuclear weapons. Players use reconnaissance units, helicopters, or fixed wing aircraft to search for enemy unit locations. Counter-battery radars acquire enemy artillery. The JANUS simulation at LLL has demonstrated the value of the computer as a sophisticated blackboard. A small dedicated minicomputer is adequate for detailed calculations, and may be preferable to sharing a more powerful machine. Real-time color interactive graphics are essential to allow realistic command decision inputs. Competitive human-versus-human synthetic experiences are intense and well-remembered.

Contract F19628-78-C-0002

Prepared in cooperation with Riverside Research Inst., New York. Rept. no. RRI-F/409-4-30.

During the contract year 1 October 1978 through 30 September 1979 considerable progress was made toward implementing a new Lincoln Orbit Determination (LODE) software capability at MIT Lincoln Laboratory for precise post-mission determination of reentry vehicle trajectory and motions during both exo- and endo-atmospheric phases of flight. Early in the year, RRI completed preparation of all equations for the Kaman-based forward-backward filter-smoother algorithm which provides the optimal LODE estimation capability

Ground-emplaced acoustic equipment and techniques developed to detect ballistic missile launchings are described. Ranges up to 1000 miles were obtained. The influence of meteorological conditions, seasonal changes, and detector-launch orientation are discussed for the purpose of extending the range of detection. Results of correlation techniques, which permit detection under poor signal-to-noise conditions, are presented. (Author)

This report documents AMSAA's Probability of Ac-is used to develop performance estimates for COPPERHEAD and related weapon systems. A mathematical for modeling the acquisition and maneuver portions of a COPPERHEAD trajectory is presented. In addition, the report contains a FOR-TRAN implementation of the model, a description of the required inputs, and a sample case with input and output. (Author)
