Dear Angus:

It was a great pleasure to see you again in New Delhi and to find that you are providing a U.S. presence in the ancient and honorable pursuits of polo and pig-sticking. Monty Palit picked me up at the Ashoka and took me for a ride on his polo ponies. I do think he looked much better when he used to visit the barber. He is certainly a brilliant chap, what with his unique house, publishing business and the rest.

I do wish you would look up Wolf Ladejinsky who has a suite on the sixth floor of the Ashoka and who works at the World Bank office. Wolf is a rare and magnetic character with, I am sure, very considerable insights into the Indian situation. He is also a warm human being, now in his later years. I think the American official community makes an error in neglecting him. In any case, it was really great to find your family in such good form. Please let's not lose touch, and thanks again for everything.

As ever,

Ogden Williams
