Dear Desmond:

After meeting you again in the USAID Guest House in Saigon a few weeks ago, I was not aware of your visit to Washington until I happened to visit Rand Corporation yesterday. I then called the Embassy Row Hotel, but you had checked out.

By coincidence, I had just mailed a copy of a paper which I thought you might find interesting to a friend in Saigon with the request that it be delivered to you, and since I now learn that you are back in England, I am sending an extra copy to you, enclosed herewith. The paper is self-explanatory and represents no official opinion - for better or worse - but I thought you would find it interesting. I wonder whether your insights are the same as mine. In any case you might be interested to read it.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

Ogden Williams
