F.M. COMMUNIQUE ON CAMBODIAN SITUATION

Saigon, April 24, 1970--The RVN Foreign Ministry in a communique released Thursday energetically requested the Cambodian government to put an end to all inhuman and barbarous assassinations of Vietnamese nationals and held it responsible for the loss of properties and lives of the Vietnamese due to a late response to the RVN government request on that issue.

The Foreign Ministry also demanded that a RVN delegation be allowed to enter Cambodia to attend to the repatriation of the Vietnamese, and facilities be accorded to those who ask to return to their homeland (many means of transportation are available at present for bringing them home).

The Foreign Ministry on this occasion recalled that in its communique dated April 20 it had noticed that the present confused situation prevailing in Cambodia was the outcome of Sihanouk's erroneous policy and the Communist's scheme to deliberately divide the two countries for their own benefit.

The RVN government warned the Phnom Penh government not to fall into the Communists' trap by turning the valiant Khmer anti-Communist struggle into a xenophobic campaign and sowing hatred between the Vietnamese and the Cambodians.

Though fully aware of the many difficulties met by the Cambodian authorities in their anti-Communist drive, the RVN government firmly demanded that the above claims must be met, because the prolonged disturbance has so far caused many sufferings and deaths to the innocent Vietnamese community.

The government communique laid stress on the late reaction to the earnest demands of the RVN government.

On this occasion, the RVN government appealed to all nations in the world to intervene, for humanitarian reasons, with the Cambodian authorities to solve the problem of Vietnamese nationals in line with the RVN's demands and at the same time to have the Communists end their aggression.

PRES. THIEU ASKS FOR MORE HELP FROM ALLIED NATIONS

Saigon, April 22, 1970--President Nguyen Van Thieu said today that the Republic of Viet-Nam is hopeful to receive more adequate help in all fields from the allied nations.

The President in a statement on the additional reductions of US troops in Viet-Nam and their replacement by the Armed Forces of the Republic of Viet-Nam said this morning that:

"As the Republic of Viet-Nam (RVN) has stated on many previous occasions, this war will determine the future not only of Viet-Nam but also of Southeast Asia. However, its outcome will depend on whether or not, the RVN will have the capacity and the strength to fight against Communist aggression."

He said: "This is an international war because the Communist aggressors receive massive assistance from the Communist powers. Therefore we have had to appeal for help from the friendly powers of the free world."

"However, he said the RVN also conceives that in the context of this limited and protracted war, the RVN cannot ask for the presence of a quite large number of allied forces for an indefinite period."

"Therefore the government and the people of the RVN are hopeful to receive more adequate help in all fields from the allied nations in the forthcoming months in order for the RVN by itself to gradually assume the greater share of the responsibility to protect its territory and freedom."

The President said: "The RVN confirms it continues to explore all the avenues which may lead to a prompt restoration of peace through negotiations at various levels, and in various forms. But a lasting peace in Viet-Nam and in Southeast Asia does not depend necessarily on a formal treaty, as the sad record of Communist systematic violations of treaties in the Indo-China area has shown, but on the strength and determination of the countries under Communist menace, to oppose Communist aggression and the solidarity and vigilance of free nations everywhere."

President Thieu also pointed out in his statement that in Viet-Nam, the key problem is the blatant aggression of Communist North Viet-Nam. Therefore, Vietnamese political problems can only be solved in a spirit of justice and national reconciliation, according to democratic processes, free from fear and from coercion only when the Communist aggressors stop their aggression and the right of self-determination of the people of Viet-Nam is strictly respected. The RVN also maintains its offer to negotiate with the North Vietnamese on the issue of national reunification.

THE ECONOMIC BATTLE IN VIET-NAM

By Van Ngan

Saigon -- Official statistics show that in 1968 the Republic of Viet-Nam imported over 800 million U.S. dollars worth of goods. During that same year exports were only 50 million dollars. This growing imbalance has caused the government to take a hard look at the economy. The prospects of reduced foreign assistance in the near future has resulted in a search for new ways to increase exports. It has also forced upon the Vietnamese a more austere standard of living as one way to balance the economy.

Part of the problem has grown out of war damage to the rural economy. Many farmers who used to produce enough rice to make Viet-Nam one of the leading rice exporters, have been forced to abandon much of their land and flee to the cities to escape the enemy. This upheaval in the rural economy in turn affected the production of all industries that depend on local raw materials, such as manufacturers of paper, crystal, cement, and textiles and raisers of poultry and livestock.

To pay for the millions of dollars worth of commodities imported annually the Republic of Viet-Nam has only 40 to 50 million from export revenues. The bulk of the foreign exchange required comes from the purchase of Vietnamese currency by allied forces fighting in Viet-Nam ($360 million) and from American economic aid ($360 million). The 1968 breakdown of foreign exchange showed the following categories:

- 250 million for consumer goods such as rice, sugar & milk.
- 150 million for industrial raw materials.
- 20 million for machines and equipment.
- 380 million for durable consumer items such as motor vehicles, motor-bikes, and television sets.

Many economists are concerned for the economic future of Viet-Nam because it spends so little of its foreign exchange for machines and equipment and almost two-thirds for consumer items. The economy is therefore regarded as unproductive and depending too much on foreign aid.

They urge the government to reduce imports to parallel the replacement of foreign troops. Viet-Nam's objectives, they say, should be to balance the disparity between imports and exports so that Viet-Nam can eventually become self-sufficient.

It is feared that when the United States reduces its foreign aid, the economy will be in danger of collapse if Viet-Nam is not prepared to shift into a self-sufficiency program. To meet this threat, the government has started to carry out a program of economic austerity to support their policy of growing independence in defense and pacification.

This program for self-sufficiency is based upon further development of fisheries and agriculture, the establishment of small industries to support agriculture, and the intensive exploitation of natural resources. The farm development program is an extension of long-time government efforts which include assistance to the farmers in obtaining credit, fertilizers, improved seed, and improved livestock, along with instructions on modern methods. Industries using local farm, forestry and mining resources will be protected by the new taxes on imports.

Minerals in abundant quantities in Viet-Nam include limestone, coal, phosphate and white sand. There are no salt mines, but there are 1,000 kilometers of coast line easy to exploit for local chemical industries. Viet-Nam has immense pine forests in the highlands and bamboo forests in the South. Explorations for minerals are being conducted, including a search for petroleum in the vast coastal waters of the country.

In October 1969, the President of the Republic of Viet-Nam promulgated a decree to increase the taxes on fuel, and about a thousand other imported items. These taxes are already affecting the lives of people used to an inflated war economy and introducing the hard realities of self-sufficiency. Taxes are not collected on essential food commodities, nor on items needed to foster the development of food production. The tax rate varies with the commodity's classification. A Volkswagen, for example, will require payment of 520 piasters for each dollar valuation of the car. This has raised the basic cost of this automobile from 236,000 VNP to 1,276,000 VNP or about $18,000 U.S. dollars.

About a third of the imports into Viet-Nam are tax exempt. The remainder of imports are dutiable equal to slightly less than 20 per cent of dollar valuation up to almost 500 per cent. For example petrol tax has been almost doubled from 11 piasters to 20 piasters per liter. This is equal to a total tax on petrol of about twenty cents, U.S. The effects of this tax and other increased levies obviously caused many complaints especially from the urban population and particularly among military and civil servants with fixed salaries.

The government has promised relief for those citizens with fixed incomes, but so far the tax program has out-paced the relief. Ten years ago the middle income group with fixed salaries rode to work on bicycles and few could afford the modern motorcycle, television, refrigerators, or even a radio. Now, nearly every family enjoys the advantages of these products, and many own automobiles. Some economists believe this prosperity is actually a symptom of economic illness and they consider inflation as a dangerous threat.

Obviously new taxes are designed to counter inflation. They should limit luxury spending and thus encourage savings that can be used to support development of local resources and industries. The revenue from increased taxes are used for the rural re-building and pacification programs, including financing of land reform and land distribution.

The new program for economic independence is already showing signs of success. Rice import requirements have been reduced fifty per cent, and the government is no longer importing frozen pork and chicken. Efforts to increase production of these foods are showing good results as more and more peasants are able to return to their farms. Factories and mines that were closed due to war disruptions are being repaired, and are resuming their production. It looks as if Viet-Nam will be able to win the economic battle as well as the military one.
