The King of the Rats, His High Rodentness Samuel 1, (Who was duly coronated by the leading Rats in a ceremony in the capitol of the Great Kingdom), tried to keep the peace and attempted to negotiate with the dastardly Boars. But alas, it was not to be. The Boar Leader, believing that old age and treachery overcome youth and exuberance, renewed his treacherous and devious assaults.

Just got back to the BB for the first time in a few days and was very glade to see replys to my note.

Was your gunship outfit the one right there on the same flightline as the dustoffs, Ill tell you one thing you guys kept my bacon out of the fire more than once, I was back in the states when you were there but thanks just the same >>>

As far as partying you are right when you say we partyed hard every chance we got, Did you ever get a chance to go to the dustoff club right there in the dustoff area I spent a few hours there myself.

Just by chance did you get to know any of the dustoff crews if you did I've been trying to find out what happened to the medic I flew with, he extened 6 months after I left and I lost his address after I got home, some years later when I got to see the wall I think I found his name on it, My friends name was Gragory L White, he was a short guy with curly blond hair and glasses. If you didn't know any >>> of the crews, Did you happen to hear of a dustoff going down while you were there or just befor you got there.

Well on a lighter note my parents live in NV 86 miles SE of Reno in Yerington did you ever hear of the place.

Well better go hope to hear from you

Sarge-Yerington would be a great place to be a RN, as well as a Doc. Except that RNs, LVNs are ones that do all the work get the ulcers and not the pay. I am on perment total disability and have unfortunatly spent a lot time in the Hospital, the people that do 94% of the work are the RNs. I hope my Doc's don't get to upset reading that.

Carson, Dayton, are both real nice places, there kind of like Reno was when I was growing up. A lot of people moving there from Ca. I bet it would be an easy place for an RN to get work. Your right at base of prettest Mnts in the far West. And, Tahoe is only 25 min.s away. Just keep to skiing and stay away from the tables and you will do great.

On Hiep Duc--Hell we didn't know what we were getting into. Typically being a grunt all you knew was that a call would come in from some HQ and you were told to get your stuff together--choppers were in air. You would be picked up and were going to "so and so" because there probably had been some hostile action. Much of the time by the time we got there all was quiet--other times maybe some sniper fire--maybe a lot of fire. Maybe it lasted a while--maybe not. After a while you figure that either (1) your time is up and you go home or (2) you get wounded and get out of the field for awhile or (3) you luck out and get a d-ck job back at the HQ. You never know what will happen when Huey's drop you in--it's a day to day thing. You kind of cast your fate to the wind and hope for the best. My unit--D. Co. spent only about a week in the Hiep Duc area to relieve another outfit first then we patrolled the surrounding jungle and broke machetes on the dense weeds in that area. The intensity of the firefight I was in was just incredible. I carried a thousand rounds of ammo and used it in two hours plus I shot leftover ammo from guys who got wounded after I ran out. All I can say is that those suckers were well supplied and dug in very deep. Their mission was to kill/maim as many GI's as possible without any concern of how many NVA were lost. We shot at them, fired mortars and arty, had shark gunships overhead and had Phantoms bomb them. They just kept shooting and mortaring us--wouldn't stop. It was nuts. You asked about what I thought at the time. Well a battle like that is so intense--you don't think--you do whatever it takes to save your *ss and everyone else's. We fortunately didn't have Rambo type--we believed in self preservation--no one put pressure on us to get body count. It is amazing how people can act under stress like that. Two guys ahead of me were pinned down behind a wall of sod. They could not go in any direction without getting killed immediately. I yelled up to them not to move. The stress was so incredible. All of a sudden, these two guys started laughing and told jokes to each other. They started yelling jokes back to me. I guess it was their way of dealing with the stress. They could look behind their position and see GI's getting hit and there was nothing they could do about

No--I don't dictate a lot of letters. As far as the writing goes--it's a funny experience. Ten years ago I couldn't have written two sentences about VN. I told every one I forgot. I tried very hard to forget. About 18 months ago I got ticked off about the Desert Storm celebrations and I told a big group of my co-workers about how I had served in VN and the rejection we got. From that point forward I have learned how to unpack these memories and to explain them in a context of emotion and feeling that other people can relate. A year ago, I couldn't have written more than a page without breaking into emotion and tears. I probably would have stopped the note in midstream.

It is very hard for me to explain what has happened to me in 18 months. Perhaps other vets on this board have had the same type of thing happen to them. Since I started unpacking all of the VN memories from my brain--my thinking is better, my thoughts are more organized, I can recall highly emotional experiences in great detail (it is amazing to me sometimes), and I can tell them to others so that they can understand them. What happened??--it beats the hell out of me--I can't explain it either. Somehow all of those repressed memories were interfering with my mind ever since I left VN. And I feel a whole lot better about it now.

Where is all of this heading for me. I don't really know. I think it would be neat to someday put a book together about the Americal in VN and to get stories contributed by a number of vets about their various experiences. Sorry, I guess I am just dreaming.

On other matters, thanks for telling me about Proutil. I bought a copy and now all I have to do is figure out how to use it. I'm also in the process of upgrading to a 486 machine to make all of this easier for me.

Today is a rare January day in St. Paul. It is 45 degrees out and I have to tend to a barbecue I set up in a snowbank. We hardly souls up here have to take advantage of breaks in the weather--a few nights ago it was 10 below. WAKE UP CALL

One dismal, damp and hazy morning in the Fall of '69, we arose just prior to the dawn of another day on LZ Max. I was on duty as the main tower guard, and was about to be relieved by the day guard so I could join my buddies in the day's festivities. From my vantage point I could see down into the mess hall which was rapidly filling up with half-awake GI's seeking to get breakfast. As I saw my replacement coming I got my gear together and prepared to join them.

He had barely got one foot on the bottom step to the tower when, BOOM!!! The unmistakable blast of a claymore erupted from the base of the LZ. Instantly all Hell broke loose. An M-60 opened up, followed immediately by the crack of small arms, which were answered just as quickly by the all too familiar cackle of an AK-47.

From the mess hall below there came a horrendous crash as 50+ men attempted to dive under the mess hall tables at once. Then, as one, they burst out through the doors looking just like dark green toothpaste rapidly squeezed from a tube. Behind them they left a cloud of silverware, paper plates, condiments and leftovers. Tracers rose from the mist, some of them landing entirely too close to the tower, where I and my replacement both huddled.

From the 'ville below us came the sound of mortars firing and then impacting in the mist near the source of the tracers. "Hold your fire!", screamed our CO and others, "there are friendlies out there". Then as quickly as it started, the firing stopped. As it turned out, our ARVN friends from the 'ville had just ambushed a column of NVA passing along a trail not 200 meters from our wire. Our officers had known about it but assumed that ARVN would come up empty handed as usual and hadn't told us. They weren't empty handed this time. They killed several NVA and captured one without losing any of their own.

Later I attempted to get breakfast myself. The mess hall lived up to it's name that morning. It looked like the refuse from a very large food fight. Nobody sat down. Everyone came with their weapon and all their gear and then took their food and left. No one set foot in the mess hall for days after that without their helmet and flak jacket. Amazing how something so normally uneventful as getting up and eating breakfast could put a major strain on your

Saw a recent PBS show that explained that Murphy was a Captain or Major involved in the WWII or earlier post-WWII testing of aircraft ejection seats out at Edwards A.F.B. or somewhere close to there. Murphy was the safety officer or somesuch and held the view that "anything that could go wrong, would". He had the objective of ascertaining everything that could possibly go wrong and either >>>>> eliminating or changing it. These folks didn't do human runs on Mondays and Fridays because of post or pre-weekend failings or anticipations. As a result, these folks reportedly had a perfect safety record for years.

As I recall, the show interviewed Murphy and his fellow personnel.

Subject: 1969 Hiep Duc and other events

In my endless but yet unsuccessful search to find a copy of Death Valley--I stumbled across another book at the library which may be of interest. The History and Museums Division of the US Marine Corps published a book about a number of battles in Quang Nam, Quang Tin, Quangi Ngai provinces in 1969. Since I fought with the 1/46th at Hiep Duc I have a special interest in this book. We helped out the 4/31st and it turns out that at that same time the Marines were trying to reach other elements of the 4/31 at the same time. Apparently the 4/31st units got separated in this fierce battle. The Marines got the hell beat of them too.

This is an interesting book also because it has a lot of good maps showing the Americal AO. This includes LZ Ross, LZ Baldy, Hawk Hill, LZ West and Hiep Duc. I wish I could find LZ Professional but I couldn't (maybe Frank Fortuna still remembers the map grids.) There are also a lot of small villages and specific hills on the map which many of you guys probably remember.

I remember Hiep Duc as one helluva battle. This book confirms my observation. I had forgotten about the 100+ degree heat. The Marines came under fire so heavy they couldn't retrieve their dead...a quote in the book from a Marine Colonel: "It was a very grim lesson that was learned." I can find no difficulty agreeing with that. Anybody who served in the Americal is going to recognize a lot of the locations named in the book. It is called U.S. Marines in Vietnam--High Mobility and Standdown--1969. Author is Charles R. Smith. Published in 1988. A great job of documenting the year 1969 for all Marine activities. I wish the Army would write something equivalent. Names, dates, places, battles, number of casualties--much of the stuff we spend all this time trying to remember--the Marines have already published. I guess it gives us something to do.

The incident when I almost lost my head was in July of 69.--give or take a month. That might have been before Frank's time. He might have known some of the participants though. In May/ June of 69 there was a siege on LZ Professional that lasted about 10 days --- the 1/14th battery took some very heavy losses and therefore had to be replaced with an entire new unit. We had gotten to know the old 1/14th unit pretty well. They were a laid back bunch and I thought they were pretty good. Apparently the top command must have thought that they were not maintaining enough military discipline--and apparently concluded that caused the casualties.

The replacement 1/14th unit was a whole different story. Reminded me of basic training a bit. They had very inexperienced people. Made them wear flak jackets all of the time and they usually double-timed it every where they went. As grunts, we got a chuckle out of how the replacement battery was run. Glad we were not in it. It reminds me of when Patton took over the 2nd Armored Div. in No. Africa in WWII. The old story how can a unit be any good if it doesn't look good--polished boots etc....

At least in my infantry unit, in the bush, we didn't get too concerned about dress or looks or any of that good stuff. We just performed very well as a unit. Unfortunately, when we came back into the firebase or the rear area--we would actually have to shave. Old memories...

Whenever calling in artillery or air support, I would give my position, (six digit co-ordinates on the map) and then using the compass give direction and distance to target. To give the pilots a better picture of exactly where we were we would throw out a colored smoke grenade that the lead bird would identify, and then give him direction and distance to target. Also identify the target as well as possible, (# of men in the open) or try and locate a land mark to use as a reference point. (so many meters at 45degrees from large dead stump, enemy in tree line) It helped if you could also give type of weapons and even better yet location of all large cal. weapons because these the pilots would either try and avoid or else they would take them out first.

For artillery I would give the map coordinates of enemy positions and map coordinates for friendly positions along with direction and distance from target. I made it a habit as I am sure we all did, to know EXACTLY where I was on the map at all times. This was the life blood of the platoon. All resupply and support were dictated on leaders knowing at all times exactly where you were.

If by chance you were lost, and in those triple jungles that was easy to do, and if you could not find a land mark to orient yourself, you would call Red Leg (arty) and have them shoot a marking round on a given coordinate, and then you could reference your position to the splash of the round. But as a rule, 99% of the time you made it a point to know where you were, and you would plot your movement on the map as you were moving on the ground. It got to be second nature after a very short period of time to be exact and accurate. I can remember more than once calling in arty so close to our position that dirt, twigs, branches, and some shrapnel would blow on us. But hey if the enemy was in close that is what it required to take him out, and that is what most of us did. Looks like I started rambling again, but thanks for asking.

We were working about 30 clicks West of Quang Ngai in the steeper mountains out there. We had set up in our night logger and as darkness set in our platoon observed hundreds of lights moving in column down a mountain range further west of our position and by all indications the movement was taking place in Laos. I called in what we observed to higher command. We were told to make sure that we were dug in and to keep our heads down as there would be a bombing mission on the opposite mountain ridge within the hour. We went about our task of digging in even deeper than we were and awaited the coming bomb raid.

I expected to hear the planes come on station and prepare themselves for their bombing mission. I was totally unprepared for the sudden concussion and brilliant light show that accompanied it. It was my introduction to a B-52 arc-light. Our platoon was easily(1.5-2)clicks away as the crow flies and as I mentioned on an opposite mountain top, none the less our night logger trembled as if it were our mountain peak that was being bombed. The concussion blew dust over our position and the wind that accompanied it was awesome. It was like being in the middle of a dust storm.

The ensuing silence was eerie to say the least. I assumed that we would be asked to patrol the area and give higher command a bomb assesment, but instead we were ordered to patrol to the east the next morning. I always believed the reason was that at that time we were not supposed to be conducting any missions in Laos. But as most of us know that was not the case, the only ones that were not aware of our presence in Laos was the American public. I can only imagine what damage that bombing mission did to the NVA enemy on that ridgeline. I knew the mission was coming but the reality of its awesome destruction and power can not be related in words. No matter how I try to explain that event my words do not do it justice. It sort of takes your breath away, leaves you speechless, and plain scares the hell right out of you. I can't imagine what those troops on the receiving end went through but I am willing to bet that most of them were evaporated into a fine mist. Sam

To All,

For some reason I was sitting here working on a written theme paper I need to turn in Thur. when for some reason this experience from VN days came to me. For those of you that were with 11LIB or other Americallers that ever worked out of Duc Pho, you must remember the tall hill that Brigade was built around. It was called Montezuma. Anyway, some time around Feb-March 71 I was in Duc Pho on stand down. The 2nd. platoon medic and I decided to hike up to the top to have a look around. It was a pretty good hump, especially because it had been raining for the past 2-3 days. Once on top the rain and wind really picked up. It seems as though the men that lived up there had not had a water or food re-supply since the rains began because of the weather conditions. Anyway Doc and I get up there on top of Montezuma and before you know it we are in Typhoon conditions. The wind was unbelievable blowing from East, the south China Sea, to west. The crazy part was that while we were climbing up we approached from the west side, the side that HQ. and the chopper sqd. was located. And from that approach the winds did not seem as severe. No doubt the height and width of Montezuma was sheltering that side from the force of the storm. So Doc and I are up there wondering around, checking out the quad-fifty, the mortars, the radar screens, the Mars station, just reconing like two grunts will do. At the very peak of Montezuma was a tower that must have been 50 feet high. We asked around and got permission to climb up there and get a real birds eye view. Well Doc and I are up there and we notice quite a commotion going on down below with the OIC and his NCOs. We finally get the word that a re-supply is coming up from the chopper pad below. It turns out that the chopper is a (not the huey but that big one that could carry a whole platoon, can't remember the name now) but you guys know which one I mean. So Doc and I watch this big lumbering whirleybird come up the west side of the hill, apparently without any problems.

By now the wind is blowing roofs off of hooches, hats, off of heads, and blowing small trees over. None the less up comes that chopper. Doc and I can not believe that this pilot going to try and land this monster up next to this tower where the chopper pad is located. Up it comes, the pilot manuevers the big bird over towards the pad, and suddenly the wind just about blows the tower over, unbelievable wind. The pilot takes the bird up higher for some reason and all of a sudden comes down, just like someone cut the engine. It just about hits the ground when the pilot regains control and begins to lift back up. Only problem is that the main rotor blade hit the side of Montezuma and went spinning towards the group of NCOs and OIC and lodges in the ground right beside them. Somehow it seemed as if the chopper continued to rise for a few seconds but then came crashing down not forty feet from where Doc and I were in that tower. That thing just disintigrated. The largest piece we found was probably that main rotor prop that was lodged in the ground. Miraculously none of the bystanders were hurt, but there was not much left of the chopper and crew. Just charred pieces of meat. That thing disintigrated in seconds flat. I do not know what brought that memory back to me, but there it is. Think I am rambling, time to get back to the books.

PRODIGY(R) interactive personal service

Reading your posting to Mike SR SR reminded me of a patrol west of Quang Ngai, we walked into a NVA basecamp and was 1/3 the way in before we realized what we had done. As we reconned around the basecamp we uncovered some tunnels or caves that ran into the mountain. When higher command was informed of the find they sent us out 50# bags of powdered CS that they wanted us to spread throughout the caves and tunnel system. We destroyed many of the fighting positions and bunkers and spread some of the powdered CS throughout the basecamp. When it came time to do a job on the caves and tunnels we brainstormed how to best accomplish the task with minimal risk to us grunts. The thought of crawling down into them and trying to spread the powder just did not make much sense, because whoever crawled down there would invariably get that crap all over themselves. Well the plt. Sgt. was a demolitions expert and always wanted to use his expertise and insisted this was a job for him. I knew that I and most of the rest of the men had no desire to haul those bags around inside those caves and tunnels especially if Charles was hidding out in them. As far as I was concerned it only seemed logical that that would be where Mr "C" would be since he was not above ground.

The plt sgt went about his task with a gleam in his eye. He method was to crawl into the opening and take with him not only the 50# bag of CS but also a claymore mine. He would crawl for the length of the det cord that attached to the claymore, set the bag upright and place the claymore inside the bag. He then would crawl back out and detonate. Within a few moments we would observe dust and powdered CS come flowing out the cave opening. The plt. Sgt. successfully went through this routine for about 5 or 6 tunnels and when we had only one bag of CS left he decided to attempt his manuever on what was the largest of the caves. It went just like clock work until he detonated the claymore. There was a secondary explosion and it seemed like all 3 or 4 hundred lbs. of CS that we (he) had distributed came rushing out of the caves and tunnels. We were litterly covered with that *hit, and of course it was one of your normal 97degree days, and we all had worked up a good sweat just watching the sgt. do his thing. Well that dust and powder found a home on each and everyone of us. We looked like we had been playing in the flour bin. Itch, and scratch, and cough, and cry, and in between laugh, but then choke some more and on it went in a continuous vicious cycle. We were literally miserable for about 2-3 days when we luckily found a stream to wash our fatigues and selves. There were some nasty burns and rashes that Doc had to deal with, in fact a couple of guys had to be dusted off because of the severity of their problems. The army sent us out some lotion and tried to lessen the hardship, but it was miserable. The only thing that could have been worse would have been if "Chuck" had been around to witness our ordeal.

I am quite certain that the plt. was combat ineffective ten seconds after that last bag blew. But true to GI form we found quite a bit of comic relief in that episode and it would invariably be retold time after time, especially when the we got some replacements that had not experienced the great dusting.

Well, don't let the ba*tard* get you down.

It was this note about the CS that reminded me of Maryann, the Fire Base that was over run on March 28th 1971. In all the insueing notes about that action the only one, I beleive that mentioned that was the artcile in Time Life. It made an impact on Chu Lia in that supply sgt.s every where looking for gas masks. Being in a gun company I beleive all are masks were kept in lockup with the guns. Several days after the attack I went back to Quag Tri, never thought about it agin. But, it seems to me that would have been a concern for the surrounding Fire Bases. Just a thought.

You got the jest of most of it though. Seems like the Vietnamese were taking it no matter which way they turned. Can't really blame them for wanting to govern their own. Seems as though circumstances led Ho to choose those he did for economic help, seems as though his first choice, the good old USA turned him down. That really did not leave him many alternatives. I often wonder what would have, could have happened had....but that is so much dust in the wind, the reality of what did happen is the source for most of our grief and distrust. More of those that served should become acquainted with the history of that country to better appreciate those we fought for and against.

Don't let the bastard* get you down.

THE FIGHTING 164TH

We were shifted around in the army
Wondered what we'd do in this war
But then fighting men were needed
So they called on the 164th . . .

We worked like hell in Caledonia
We supplied it with food and with shell

Then a call came down from those gallant Marines

They needed help on Guadalcanal . . .

We loaded our ships in the morning
Headed out for the open sea
Destination a Hell on Earth
Where many of our graves would be. . .

We slid into the bay at the dawning
The island lay pretty and calm
But before the day was near over
We would all know the sound of a bomb. . .

We headed out for Henderson
Plumb confused but ready to go
The 1st and the 2nd were called right in
But the 3rd got none of the show. . .

The 3rd was weary and sleepless
For it was a hot rainy night
Then the orders came from Battalion
That we must be ready to fight. . .

We donned our gear and our leggins
And shouldered our mortars and gun
And started the march to the front lines
To meet the men of the rising Sun. . .

It was hell, that march to the front lines

Over that slick muddy road
We sweated and cursed but straightened up
And carried on with our load.
We moved into the lines in the darkness
Those foxholes were sticky as gum
We lay there and asked god for courage
In the attack we knew was to come. . .
They hit our lines in the darkness

Our guns roared steady and clear and the dead piled up before us
Those Japs knew the Army was here.
For three nights they pounded that front line
We took every shell, every shot
You'd better give up Gneral Tojo
If that's the best that you've got. . .
The Marines got all the credit
Of the glory we got none
But we don't give a good dog-gone
As long as the battle was won.

SUBJECT: THE WALL, A POEM

Hi - I'm not a vet but I wrote this poem about The Wall and it is dedicated to Danny Sarakov, my brothers best friend and the only person in my town who didn't come back. I met him once when I was 7 years old.

The Wall

He was not an old man,
But he carried a cane;
In each step he took,
You could see the pain.

First he found Danny, then
Mikey with John one and two;
Friends of long ago,
To him they were true.

...
With care he took photos,
Then fingered each and every name;
You could see his eyes crying,
Knew his heart was not the same.

...
He found Terry and Hammer,
HeHe found them one and all;
He placed a flag and flower,
By some granite we call The Wall.

As he turned and walked away,
The Wall cried a single tear;
You could see the ghost of many,
We wish were all still here.

(c) 1992 - LeRoy Alaways

I hope the vets don't mind and comments are welcome.

HI EVERYONE, SANDRA BOOZER CHECKING IN! I KNOW EVERYONE KNOWS I WRITE "THANK YOU" LETTERS TO ALL VETS. I RECEIVED A LETTER YESTERDAY, I WANT TO SHARE WITH YOU. HE IS ON DEATH ROW. HE WROTE THIS POEM:

ALL YOU MARINES WHO KNOW ME WHEN I WAS THIN AND VERY SALTY.

I WAS THOUGHT TO BE VERY GUNG HO.

THAT WAS THE ONLY WAY A MARINE SHOULD GO.

TO GATHER THESE WORDS COME VERY SLOW.

THESE DAYS YOU MIGHT SAY MY LINES OF COMMUNICATION ARE SHORTED OUT AND I LOST THE COMPASS.

I SEE MOST OF MY FRIENDS ON THE WALL
CAN'T HEAR THEIR CRIES ANYMORE.

I WEEP FOR THEM ALL.

BUT THEY ARE IN HEAVEN I'M SURE.

I'M STILL IN THE JUNGLE AND EVERY NOISE
KEEPS ME ON THE END OF MY BUNK.

MY DREAMS ARE FILLED WITH FACELESS BODIES,
SCREAMING TO TAKE MY LIFE.

IT'S SOMETHING LEFT OVER FROM THOSE DAYS OF SEIGE AND STRIFEWELL, THAT'S ALL BEHIND ME NOW.

I WISH THE REST OF IT WOULD GO THERE TOO.

SO WHERE BREKKE?WHAT YOU HAVE TO SAY?

SOME DAY I WOULD LIKE TO SEE THOSE OF YOU WHO ARE STILL LIVING.

LIKE WHEN YOU WERE HEROES, DON'T STOP GIVING.
FOR US THE WAR WAS WON.

THERE'S A SONG FOR EVERY MOTHER'S SON.

I HOPE YOU KNOW WHAT I MEAN---BY SALTED MARINE.

SUBJECT: ANY CADETS?

ATTENTION ALL CADETS:

The board manager for this BB is thinking of adding a new topic, "Cadet Organizations" or something along those lines, and he needs an approx. number of how many cadets post here. If you think that you have an idea, please post it here, or start posting individually, and I'll count[NEXT] how many people answer.

Sincerely,
Nick Ochs
