I just got a reply from a Robert E. Richardson, Assistant Chief Cartographic and Architectural Branch, National Archives Washington DC 20408.

Re:request regarding maps of vietnam.

They have, Group 77, Records of the Chief of Engineers, Army Map Service (what'd I tell you about those engineers) L-7014 series (1:50,000) we located sheet 6639-1 (Tien PHOUC), sheet 6739-II (Quang Ngai), sheet 6739-III (Son Ha) These are unannotated topographic maps.

They also located sheet ND 49-1, 1501 Air Series (1:250,000). They can provide oversized electrostatic copies of these maps for $5.40 each.

They could not locate sheet 6640-II and sheet 6640-III among their holdings.

Their minimum mail order charge is $6.00, and all orders must be prepaid. No shipping charges UPS or fourth class mail. For considerably more money they can furnish >>> photographic prints B&W, Color Negative, or Color Transparency.

They say 6 to 8 weeks for completion. We'll see as I'm going to send for these asap.

Doc that's a good idea Maps on the walls will be a big hit with the folks, do it but bring your own tacks scotch tape etc. The meeting room has in the past been hung with lists so maps will really catch their eyes. Then move em to the Nam room. Think we only use the meeting room once or twice, some times it also serves as the dining room. This year could be a big change. Never know till you get there. O'hara

6739-II is the southern Bantangan and Quang Nai and a little south. How far south was Duc Pho from Quang Nai? The maps that I already have show south to just the Quang Nai # 6739-II so I have to find the next one south of that. I think that Frank has the northern AO, and I have the middle AO covered and I'll get the southern AO together too. Doc M

Basically covered mostly between LZ's Dragon and Bronco, but did a little of everything between Chu Lai and Qui Nhon. Only east-west road we did any work on was LZ Liz's access road, which was between 3 and 5 klicks long. Heard several guys talk about the Mo Duc road but don't remember it. There was a road under construction by, I think, the 26th just north of LZ Dragon, heading west towards the coast. It was still not done when I left. Could this be the one they're talking about?

Marty & Big Ed-

I remember several sh ! tters going up in flames. But the neatest trick I saw was the arty guys tossing in bags of powder to speed the process. Remember, you couldn't just dump in some diesel and set it off. It had to be stirred with an engineering stake to get everything well mixed, for proper combustion. One of the goofs I noticed in the movie platoon was the S burning scene. The guy bent down and rested the trapdoor on his back while he reached in with his bare hands. Those trapdoors got rather splattered. Any I ever saw had a special prop for the door and a hook for the cans and a stake for the all important sturr, not to mention the jerry cans of diesel.

The same sergeant at River Boat that ordered me to take care of the dead cow also fired papasan Sh Burner and assigned me the job, permanently. He again reminded me that hill sanitation was my responsibility. Permanently didn't last long. I think one day, then I rehired papasan and snuck him to the Shi tters to do the job while I was medcapp . I was the Doc and went out on patrols and ambushes and the other grunts backed me in this Shi tty controversy. I dont think they wanted a medic that might have to patch em up direct from the shi tter. He backed down and old papasan kept his job. Our hill was such a small place noone was worried about and mapping out the place for mortars, as charles knew where we were anyway. That E-7 was a jerk, and this escapade, along with the dead cow eppisode, and the way I was most always in the ville and not at his beck and call at all times, built up to >> a showdown that's going to have to be a subject of another post. I ended up with H Troop but not without some fireworks.

Old papasan was real happy to earn the SOP a day and I was happy to be out of that particular detail, and the old E-7 was happy about nothing, especiaaly being where he was on that hill.

Doc,

I've got your maps. I asked the 2 to come up with the map #'s you posted and received back brand new sheets. They're better then anything I remember having in 1969. Map sheet #49-1 covers from just south of Quang Ngai to north of Da Nang (this has the Tam Ky area on it). Sheet # 49-5 runs from just north of Mo Duc (the ARVN base camp) north of >>> Duc Pho to a line parallel with Pleiku. These are JOG maps for Joint Operations Graphic (air), and the scale is 1:250,000. Pilots refer to them as "one over the world" maps. Most of the time we might of had one in the cockpit, but we used a 1:50,000 tac map.

The 2 sent me some extras so I can provide (2) of #49-1 and (1) of #49-5. The maps were printed in 1972 and as we were still providing maps to the ARVN, VNAF and probably the NVA the legends are printed in English and Vietnamese.

Brought back quite a few memories. Some of the old Fire bases are marked, but unfortunately not with the names.>>>>

E-Mail me your address and I'll get them in the mail. If I receive it by Sunday morning I'll get it out quickly. I leave then for a couple of weeks TDY so will not have access to the board. Take care and thanks for posting the numbers. When they were delivered to the office, my boss (a young but real fine Major) asked what the hell they were for. After hearing my reply he remarked, "you over 40 guys do some weird s_____.

What a Great Surprise. Your S-2 is on the ball, better than the National Archives, I'm still waiting for the monochrome copies that I ordered from them. A new issue set will be cherished. Any luck with the series L-7014, (1:50,000)?

When I pin them on the wall in Topeka, I'd bet > money that there will be a few memories jogged enough that the LZ's will be remembered and named.

Tell your boss thanks, and tell him not to worry till you start fileing flight plans Chu Lai-Duc Pho Direct. Who'd ever think at the time that we'd ever get over 40?

Were you the guy's that flew that 101's forward base way into Iraq. I remember thinking, when following our news, that was some piece of air mobile logistics.

FSB Mary Ann

Only one of the twenty ARVN soldiers present was wounded; ignoring their own inactivity, the Americans complained bitterly that the South Vietnamese had made little effort to assist them. But their help would have mattered little in the debacle. The action at Mary Ann was the Americal Division's largest single combat loss in over a year and one of the most damaging attacks on a firebase during the war.

When the smoke had cleared in the morning, the shattered 1/46 started to pick up the pieces. The acting battalion commander, Major Donald Potter, flew into a rage and ordered the burning of the bodies of five sappers that had been taken earlier to the trash dump. For the next several days the corpses smoldered among the garbage while the Army tried to figure out what had happened at Mary Ann. "Somebody out there [at] Mary Ann scr*wed up," an Americal sergeant declared.

The MACV inspector general undertook an investigation and concluded that the camp's defenses had been sorely inadequate and many soldiers derelict in their duty. Because the enemy had never probed the base and the battalion was anticipating evacuation, its men had grown complacent and had ignored basic defensive procedures. Many were unfamiliar with the base's defensive plan or the location of claymore maines, trip flares, grenades, and M-16 machineguns.

Much of the blame for the tragedy was placed on Lt. Col. Doyle, an eighteen-year veteran whose record up to then had been exemplary. The Army charged him with "sub-standard performance of duty" in failing to oversee proper defense of FSB Mary Ann. Doyle requested a court-martial hearing at which he could refute the charges, but his request was never granted. In April 1972 Lt. Col. Doyle was formally reprimanded by Secretary of the Army Robert F. Froehlke.

Four other officers were disciplined, including Doyle's operations officer. The others were chastised not because of the attack but for the incineration of enemy bodies that took place the next day, a clear violation of the Geneva Convention. The inspector general reported that both Major General James L. Baldwin, the division commander, and Col.

William S. Hathaway, the brigade commander, had learned of the burnings on April 1 but had taken no disciplinary action. Baldwin admitted he had ordered the burnt remains buried and had not informed his superiors of the incident. The Army relieved his of his command in July and later placed a letter of admonition in his file. Col. Hathaway was denied promotion and, like Col. Doyle, formally reprimanded.

While FSB Mary Ann was yet another stain on the record of the 23d Infantry Division, it also seemed to reflect more broadly the state of American force disengaging from Viet Nam. At the conclusion of his report, the inspector general urged that the incident be put into "the proper perspective," declaring that it "could very well have happened to other units of the 23d Infantry Division or to like combat units in Viet Nam, today. The reduced level of combat activity and the increasing publicity by the news media focusing upon ending of the war tends to create this.

(5) Previews by SPENCER BABA (BCGB30A)

US forces were in a defensive posture and the South Vietnamese army was shell-shocked from the debacle in Laos, so the enemy became more audacious, continually attacking firebases throughout 1971. The most notorious and damaging attack came, as misfortune would have it, on a 23d Infantry Division base.

Located fifty kilometers west of Chu Lai, Fire Support Base Mary Ann was then the westernmost Americal outpost in Quang Tin Province. The 1st Battalion, 46th Infantry, now under control of the 196th Brigade, used it as its base for patrols in the area but had encountered no evidence of enemy regulars, and the camp was due to be turned over to the South Vietnamese. Many of its men and much equipment had already been shipped out, and a feeling of lethargy seemed to have imbued most of the remaining 231 Americans, who were looking forward to redeployment to Chu Lai, then home to the United States. Staying at Mary Ann "was sort of like a stand down, a rest period," said one soldier.

The sense of security ended in the early morning hours of March 28, when at least fifty NVA sappers, clad only in shorts and smeared with black grease, breached the concertina wire, sensors, and trip flares around the camp, undetected by any of the guards. As Americans and South Vietnamese soldiers huddled in their bunkers to form a simultaneous mortar attack, the marauders, armed with satchel charges, RPGs, and automatic weapons, roamed the camp virtually uncontested. They moved with brutal precision, knocking out the base's tactical operations center, helicopter refueling stations, howitzers, and other key locations within minutes. When an American captain tried to turn on the base alarm system and use the phone, he found that both lines had been cut and quickly realized the attackers "had an intimate knowledge of the firebase." Though the battalion had encountered no enemy troops, they had all the time been nearby, watching and waiting.

Traveling through the camp from south to north, small teams of sappers moved through the trench lines and tossed explosives and tear gas grenades at fifteen bunkers. Many of the Americans were unaware that the enemy had entered the camp until explosions rocked their own positions. Lt. Col. William P. Doyle, the battalion commander, was unsure of what was happening until a satchel charge exploded nearby, wounding him in the legs. Some men stayed in the bunkers until the attack was over or until they were forced out by explosions. Others scrambled into position and immediately came face to face with gun-toting NVA. The surprise was total, the defense nonexistent.

Thirty minutes after the attack started, the intruders withdrew under covering fire. Newly arrived helicopter gunships caught some sappers on the wire, but most slipped away, leaving fifteen dead. FSB Mary Ann was in flames, its command centers and bunkers heavily damaged. All twelve officers lay dead or wounded. A total of thirty Americans were killed in the attack, and another eighty-two were wounded.
