

Vietnam

It was America's longest, costliest, most controversial war.

And all the while it was being fought...

... the camera never blinked.

Some called it a "television war." Others dubbed it the "living room war" for the way in which it entered our homes and our lives each evening.

Those nightly images still haunt the minds of anyone who had ever seen them. Just close your eyes right now and remember . . .

... American G.I.s carrying children to safety . . . innocent-looking Vietnamese children in the "pajamas" of the jungle guerrilla . . . LBJ's wan look as he announced his decision not to run for re-election . . . a mini-skirted young wife running to embrace her ex-POW husband as he steps off the plane that returned him to freedom . . . Henry Kissinger claiming "Peace is at hand" . . . the final, frenzied helicopter evacuation from a Saigon rooftop . . . and so much more.

They're the images that time cannot dim. And now they can come into your home once again . . . along with narration, interviews and interpretations that will help you to finally, fully understand our long ordeal in Vietnam. How we got into it . . . what we did while we were there . . . what it means to us now that it's over.
