Dear Family -

This is just a quick note before I do another delightful night of guard duty. There are, however, a couple of things that I'd like to check out first. First, could you look up in one of the catalogues or communications from Chicago the proper address for the University (in particular, the Dept of History) and the name of the Department Secretary, so that I can start communicating with them about next year? I'd like to start as early as possible so that I have time to write back to them if necessary about any queries I might have, especially about the possibilities of financial aid.

Second: Just for fun I ordered some books to be sent home. Someone received advertisements along with some tapes he ordered - and they included books from publisher's overstock. Inasmuch as there was no sort of commitment (as there is with record clubs), the prices were low, and the titles were rather interesting, I decided to order a few. They even had (Lois will remember it) Heaven and Hell In Christian Art, at half price. The ones I ordered were all about the $1.98 mark, and for the most part historical. Here is a list so you can tell me if they arrive properly:

95831	R. Rudolphi, The Life of Francesco Guicciardini
95860	Bede Jarrett, Social Theories of Teh Middle Ages
95887	R. Lee Wolff, The Golden Key
95825	Tannenbaum, The Handwriting of the Renaissance
95812	E.R. Chamberlain, The Count of Virtue (Visconti)

The Golden Key is just a chance I took; it seemed interesting since it was about George MacDonald (I rather doubt there is more than one 19th century writer of fantasy by that name). The only qualm I have is that MacDonald is really an open target for a Freudian interpretation - ~~inasmuch as~~ i.e., upbringing and the fact there doesn't seem to really be that much information available about him. However, it seemed like too good a chance to pass up. I hope you'll be interested. My apologies if they start sending advertisements.

That's about all that I can think of at the moment. Apparently, they may be opening the photo lab again, so I might have some more pictures to send you - if they do and when I have the time.

I love you all very much.
