

Then the journalists emphasized Ly Van Sau's (?patriotism). The Vietnamese people's spokesman told them that in South Vietnam there are more than 40 revolutionary newspapers and magazines, published secretly or in liberated zones. He added, smiling: "We also have a radio and a news agency named LIBERATION."

He continued, with the same smile: "We do not work in large buildings or with modern rotary presses, and we work under difficult conditions, under the bombs of U.S. planes. Our papers have few pages, but no commercial announcements. We publish poems, reports, and stories."

Because of the voracious curiosity of his Latin American colleagues, Ly Van Sau took from his briefcase copies--some already yellowed with age--of newspapers and magazines of the South Vietnamese revolutionaries. Flashbulbs and cameras recorded one printed word which was repeated in logotypes, articles, and poems: GIAI PHONG, which means LIBERATION.
