d'Ombraie, Nicholas J. "The Imperial General Staff and the Military Policy of a 'Continental Strategy' during the 1911 International Crisis." "Military Affairs" 34 (1970): 88-93.

The General Staff was fully aware that a "continental strategy" meant that a "no nonsense" conscription, as practical on the Continent, must be adopted. " (90)

Dennis, Peter. Decision by Default: Peacetime Conscription and British Defense, 1919-39. Durham: Duke University Press, 1972.

An excellent study of British military policy between the wars. Dennis ^{first} reviews Great Britain's interwar strategy and her involvement in European affairs, as it affected the military forces, between 1919 and 1935. Beginning with the debate on defense in 1935, the author ^{then} gives a detailed account of the ~~political and foreign events~~ domestic and foreign events which eventually lead to ^{Chamberlain's} ~~the~~ decision to introduce ~~of~~ peacetime conscription in April 1939.
