Dear Mr. Taylor:

I have your letter of January 8 and wish I could be more helpful, but in fact I don't think I can be much help at all. I have ceased paying close attention to Vietnam. Not that it isn't of supreme importance, but for the reasons that I despair of learning anything really new and significant about it and find it a sickening, intractable mess. I did read somewhere that Freedom House has put out something which states the administration point of view as well as it has been expressed. There is an Englishman named P.J. Honey who argues the administration viewpoint, but I don't have a citation. Scalapino is another name. You might write the Department of State Bureau of Public Affairs for a bibliography. Hope this proves of some help.

Sincerely,
