

From 1959 to 1975, 2,700,000
Americans served in the Vietnam War.
At last, America says "thank you."

In April, 1979, a small group of Vietnam veterans resolved, for once and for all, to remember and to honor the men and women who answered their country's call to duty in Vietnam. The Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund (VVMF) was launched. With it, the dreams of a few, the efforts of a few hundred, and the generous contributions of many thousands would succeed in achieving, in three years, an unprecedented tribute to a generation of Americans whose service and sacrifice had been thus far overlooked.

In 1980, VVMF won congressional approval to build the official, national Vietnam Veterans memorial in Washington, D.C. on national parkland near the Lincoln Memorial. Soon after, the largest design competition in the history of the U.S.A. resulted in a winning design for this nation's newest landmark.

Funds to build the memorial were quickly raised from a caring and patriotic American public, glad for this long-awaited opportunity to say "thank you." And, finally, ground was broken for the Vietnam Veterans Memorial on March 26, 1982, by 123 Vietnam veterans and dignitaries simultaneously turning spadesful of earth.

Awaiting now only the addition of its flag and statue, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial stands, with dignity and serenity, reminding us of the honorable service and the courageous sacrifice of 2.7 million Americans to whom we owe our gratitude and respect.

The National Salute to Vietnam Veterans — a Celebration of Pride and Appreciation!

Carrying the spirit of the memorial forward into the minds and hearts of the American people, the National Salute to Vietnam Veterans celebrates the achievement — and the continuance — of a tribute long overdue.

Americans, participate!

How to Ride Metro

Look for the "M"

Near the entrance of every Metro station is a tall, brown-colored column or pylon. At the top of it on all four sides is the Metro letter "M". Directly beneath the "M" you will find a red, orange or blue stripe or combination of different stripes which indicate which line serves that particular station. The station name is shown at the station entrance.

Look At The Color-Coded Maps

If you're not sure how to get to your destination, or what your fare is, look at the color-coded map located near the farecard vending machines. At the bottom of the map you will find fare and travel times information. If you still feel unsure, ask the attendant in the information kiosk.

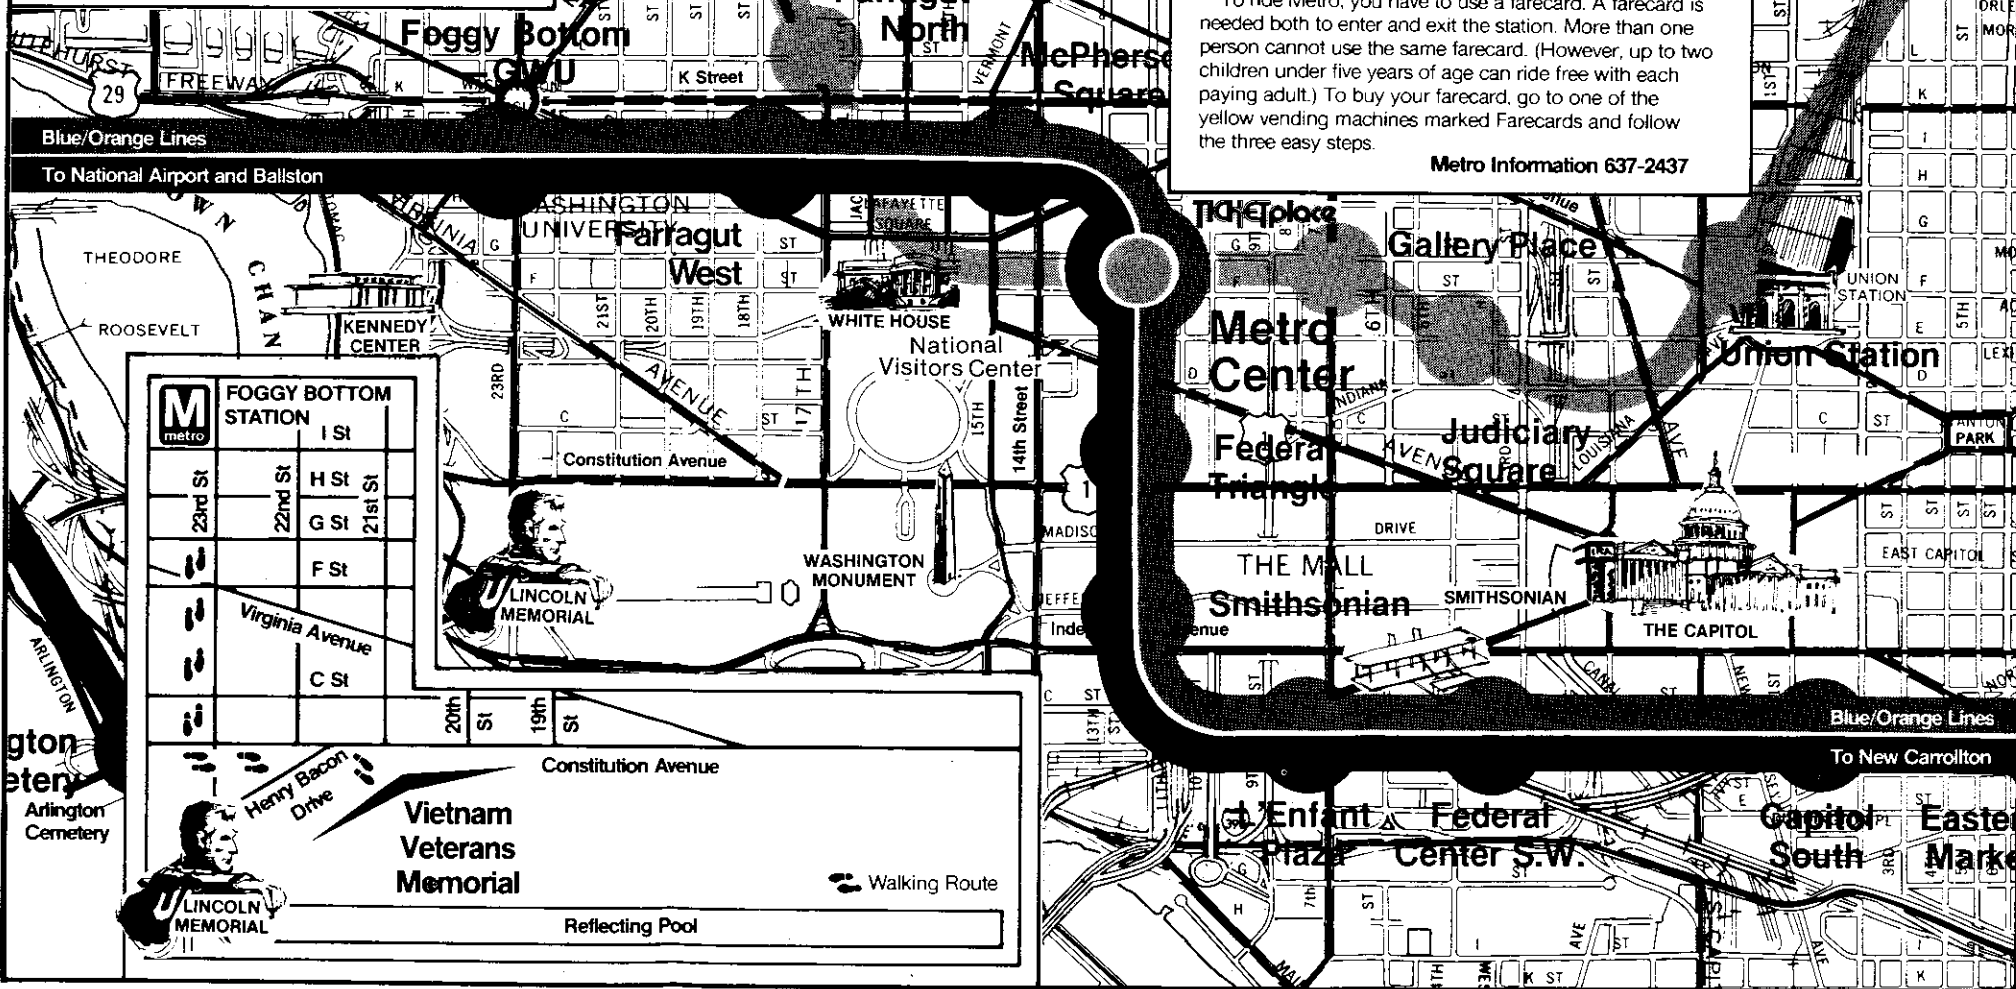

Buy Your Farecard

To ride Metro, you have to use a farecard. A farecard is needed both to enter and exit the station. More than one person cannot use the same farecard. (However, up to two children under five years of age can ride free with each paying adult.) To buy your farecard, go to one of the yellow vending machines marked Farecards and follow the three easy steps.
