"The authors have used the letter format to produce a remarkably easy-to-read and compelling story with well developed characters...This is a poignant love story that turns out to be a love triangle involving two dedicated naval officers and the United States Navy."

*Charles F. Rauch, Jr., Rear Admiral, U.S. Navy, (Retired)
Ph.D., Vice President Emeritus, University of Maine*

My Navy Too, the story of one woman's career in the U.S. Navy, is painted against a backdrop of the drama of the nineteen sixties and seventies — the Vietnam War, the women's movement, and the confusion of the Cold War, and later, the Don't Ask, Don't Tell, Don't Pursue policy debate. While Vietnam runs its tragic course, Tucker Fairfield fights within the Navy for women's rights and equality against her most implacable foe, "Big Daddy Navy." Tucker's communications with her mentor and friends and journal reveal a complex amalgam of human interactions and conflicts yet to be resolved within today's society. Is it her Navy too? Should it be?

"My Navy Too couldn't come at a better time...The story — and the stories within it — are highly personal. In the end, the resolution will have to do with profound values that touch us all. This is a courageous book."

Brad Knickerbocker, Senior Editor for The Christian Science Monitor, former Pentagon correspondent and naval aviator

"How refreshing — an account that is political and personal. I was fascinated by this book and think it should be required reading for women and men who are entering the Navy or any other service."

The Honorable Elizabeth Furse (D-OR)
Member of Congress

"My Navy Too is an intimate, compelling memoir of a remarkable young woman's life and loves in a Navy grappling with the growing numbers and importance of women in uniform. Giving her intriguing account great breadth and insight are the works of her friends and family who shared her adventures but appraised them from sharply differing viewpoints."

Rear Admiral Eugene J. Carroll, U.S. Navy (Ret.)
former Commander, Carrier Task Force, U.S. Sixth Fleet
