TIN CAN MAN is the story of World War II in the Pacific as seen through the eyes of a teen-age sailor aboard the U.S.S. Saufley, one of the most highly decorated destroyers of the war. "EJ" Jernigan takes the reader on a first-person enlistment in the "Old Navy" -- from his enlistment in Florida, to "boot camp" in Norfolk, to his first tour aboard the U.S.S. Washington, through the early months of the war at sea in the Atlantic, to a disagreement over liberty policy in New York, to the brig, to the Saufley, to the Pacific, to the end of the war.

His story is the rarely heard story of the tens-of-thousands of young Navy enlisted men who fought the war in the Pacific from boiler rooms, after steering spaces, radio shacks, bilges, and all the other glamourless spaces necessary to keep a warship fighting. It is a story of close quarters, dirty work, combat, liberty, emotions, boring food, fights, fear, and victory. It is the real story of war.
