II. Remarks and Suggestions

In the cities visited, the Budget Division is a unit in the Department of Finances.

Every city has its own budget and the main revenues come from the taxes. The cities have almost the same procedures in budgeting except in Cleveland, where they don't provide "Allotment of Funds," so the funds are released for the whole year and every Department has the full responsibility to carry out its budget.

The fiscal years vary from one city to another; there are two budgets:

- Annual budget
- Capital budget

About the expenditures, they are classified either by objects or by programs.

The budget division is composed with a small staff (from 3 to 5) whose authority is concerned with examining the fund requests, and making propositions. Only the Mayor has the last decision upon the funds requested by the Departments.

The procedures, based on the law, are set up clearly and strictly followed by every department, but to help the Department carry on their programs successfully and regularly, there are some flexibility about the transfer of funds. This flexibility is realized only in the cases of emergency.

The City Budget Office and the State Budget Agency operate separately. In the City Budget, state funds are figured most of the time.

The following cities and organizations are suggested to be visited because of their successful procedures, their organization and methods of work:

- Baltimore -- City Department of Public Schools
City Department of Public Health
State Budget Agency
- Richmond -- Budget Office
Department of Personnel
Department of Public Health
- Providence - Department of Finances
- Boston -- Federal Department of Education
Regional Department of Public Health
