VIRTUAL ARCHIVE RECEIVES FORMAL LAUNCHING

With an emphatic endorsement of the Vietnam Center, Rep. Larry Combest formally launched an Internet site displaying its vast collection of war documents, personal records, photos and other materials of historical interest from the Vietnam era.

"This is unquestionably the premier site for information on the Vietnam War," Mr. Combest told a group that assembled at Texas Tech in late December for a demonstration of the Virtual Vietnam Archive and its capabilities.

With weekly additions to its web offerings, the Virtual Archive steadily enhances its presence and prestige among scholars, historians and others interested in exploring the many facets of the American experience in the Vietnam conflict and its aftermath. The web site provides free, global access to all non-copyrighted materials available in this special collection.

The Vietnam Archive currently includes more than 250 collections of Vietnam-related materials. Some three dozen of these already have been ensconced in the Virtual Archive, and a full-time professional staff is at work digitizing other collections for the web site.

The showcasing of the Virtual Archive brought additional good news from Mr. Combest: an announcement that the Center is receiving $500,000 more in federal funding to continue expanding the scope of its web offerings. The news served to underscore the congressman's long and strong backing of the Vietnam Center. As he himself put it: "This is one of those projects that is easy to support."

Coincidentally, praise for the Archive's web site was emanating from another quarter: the Naval Historical Foundation in Washington, D.C. The NHF, announcing that it had gotten a $150,000 private grant to help digitize its oral histories, pointed to Tech's center as a model for the development of its own net-accessible collections of Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard history.

"The Vietnam Center at Texas Tech has a web site where you can either read transcripts or actually listen to interviews online, and that's where we want to be," NHF historian David Winkler said.

Tech's archival activities include an Oral History project designed to preserve the unwritten record of the U.S. experience in Vietnam. Dr. James R. Reckner, director of the Center, said the Library of Congress in Washington wants the Oral History project to be a partner in its own American Folk-Lore Project. "We have agreed to do this," Dr. Reckner said. To date, archivists have conducted over 200 interviews for the Oral History project. Nearly 100 interviews are on line with streaming audio or transcripts, or both. (To read transcripts or listen to the interviews, visit:

http://www.vietnam.ttu.edu/oralhistory/Online\_Interviews.htm

Such materials in the Virtual Archive are available in electronic format to anyone having an Internet connection. This enables people to conduct research directly from homes, schools, libraries and universities far remote from Lubbock, Texas, where Tech and the Vietnam Center are located. The archive also allows Vietnam veterans—those who actually served—to access records of importance to them in understanding their own experiences in connection with the conflict.

The Vietnam Archive has a policy of preserving records relating to all aspects of the Vietnam War. The goal is to compile as complete a record as possible, one that includes not only the records of those who served in Vietnam but also the records of those in the anti-war movement who opposed America's involvement there. A failure to include all records and perspectives of the war would leave serious gaps in the history of the nation's Vietnam experience.

FROM THE DIRECTOR

The announcement by US Representative Larry Combest (R-TX) that Texas Tech University will receive $500,000 in FY 2002 federal funding to continue the Virtual Vietnam Archive project highlights an important aspect of our effort here: teamwork. The federal funding is a result of a joint effort by Congressman Combest and Congressman and former Vietnam POW Sam Johnson (R-TX). Without their joint effort, we would be unable to undertake the labor-intensive work of providing global access to our holdings.

I would like to add, too, that even the best ideas risk failure if they lack teamwork and support. The overall Vietnam project has greatly benefited over the years from the support of Texas state legislators who early recognized the importance of a timely effort to preserve the record of America's Vietnam experience. Similarly, senior leadership at Texas Tech University have recognized the importance of our outreach programs to Vietnamese and Cambodian institutions of higher learning, as have private foundations and private individuals who have been generous in the support of these projects.

But perhaps our greatest and most consistent support over the years has come from individual Vietnam veterans and scholars interested in the Vietnam War. The former have provided their papers and memories for preservation; the latter have worked to provide a coherent interpretation of events concerning which we, the minor actors in those events, at the time lacked the larger-scale understanding of their significance. This partnership between veterans and scholars benefits both. And I am particularly pleased that the Vietnam Center at Texas Tech can play a coordinating role in this.

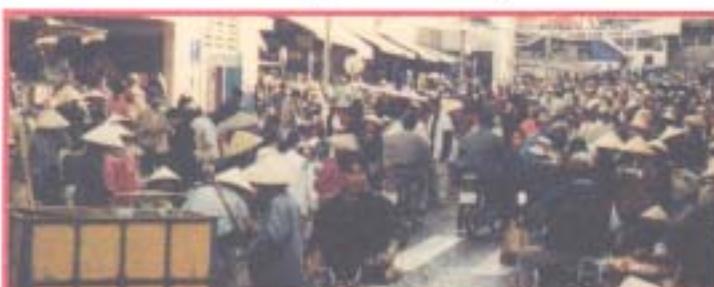

The months ahead will be busy ones for the Vietnam Center and Vietnam Archive. Atop our agenda is the 4th Triennial Vietnam Symposium. If you have not registered, please do so soon, so we can get a good handle on the numbers to expect (see p.6 for registration form). Additionally, as we need to make early commitments for the symposium banquet on the evening of Friday, 12 April, please sign up for the banquet as early as possible. We expect to have an exciting keynote speaker that night. Also on the social schedule will be a welcoming reception at the Holiday Inn on the evening of Wednesday, 10 April, a Civic Reception on the evening of Thursday, 11 April, and on Saturday evening, we will have a barbecue dinner at the National Ranching Heritage Center, to the music of the local group, "Blue Prairie."

I would like to welcome Lieutenant Colonel James G. Zumwalt to the National Advisory Council. He has accepted an invitation from Ambassador Peterson to join that board and thus to continue the work begun by his father, who served as Chairman of the National Advisory Council from 1900 until his death in January 2000.

Looking toward 2003, marking the 40th anniversary of his overthrow and assassination, we plan to focus the annual conference that year on the end of the Ngo Dinh Diem regime and that event's implications for Vietnam and the United States. More details on that as our plans progress.

I look forward to seeing all of you in Lubbock in April.

DOUGLAS PIKE RECUPERATES FROM STROKE

Professor Douglas Pike, a recognized expert on Vietnamese communism and editor of the Indochina Chronology for the past twenty years, is recuperating from a stroke suffered in November. He has been undergoing rehabilitation in Lubbock, Texas, where he joined the staff of the Texas Tech's Vietnam Center in 1997.

As a result of its editor's illness, Tech's publication of the Indochina Chronology has been temporarily suspended. Dr. James R. Reckner, director of the Vietnam Center, expressed hope that publication can be resumed in the not too distant future.

"I know that a fair number of the subscribers to the Indochina Chronology are friends and associates of Professor Pike," Dr. Reckner said. "Those wishing to send cards or letters should send them to the Vietnam Center. We will ensure they are hand-delivered to Professor Pike."

Indochina Chronology subscribers who need assistance during the professor's absence from his desk may contact Dr. Reckner by telephone at the Center, (806) 742-3742, or by email at james.reckner@ttu.edu.

Professor Pike is a retired U.S. Foreign Service Officer (1950-1980) who spent most of his career in Asia, with postings in Saigon, Hong Kong, Tokyo and Taipei.

He is the author of six books, including Viet Cong: The Organizational Techniques of the National Liberation Front of South Vietnam (MIT Press, Cambridge, 1965), which has been published in 15 languages.

He also has contributed to 24 edited volumes and has written hundreds of articles and papers on Indochina and Southeast Asia.

Professor Pike was director of the Indochina Archive at the University of California (Berkeley) from 1981 until joining the Vietnam Center four years ago.
